

stud.mag

sammenhold substantiv, intetkøn:

det at en kreds af mennesker holder sammen ved at hjælpe, støtte og forsvare hinanden i medgang og modgang

stud.mags stab

ANSVARSHAVENDE REDAKTØRER

Helene Hecquet
Sabrina Skou

FAGLIGE REDAKTØRER

Se sidste side

KORREKTURANSVARLIG

Anna Foss-Soper

SOME-ANSVARLIG

Ana Bratkova
Augusta Eleonora Schultz

PR-ANSVARLIG

Jasmin Abdul-Hamid
Mille Thorbøll

ØKONOMIANSVARLIG

Mille Thorbøll
Mathias M. F. Jakobsen

PLAKATANSVARLIG

Helene Hecquet

LAYOUTANSVARLIG

Sean Källberg

stud.mag udgives af Engerom-studerende ved Københavns Universitet.

Sponsoreret af Københavns Universitets Almene Fond og Studiemiljøpuljen.

stud.mag, 2. udgave

© MMXXVI stud.mag, Københavns Universitet Søndre Campus, Engerom Institut

Sats: Sean Källberg i Adobe InDesign. Garamond Premier Pro & Univers 11/13

Tryk: LaserTryk, Vallensbækvej 61 2625 Vallensbæk

Printet i Danmark 2026

Billede: Sarah Kirpekar-Sauer oplæser sit bidrag til stud.mag's første reception

Kære læser

I en tid hvor USA sår tvivl om sit samarbejde med Europa, er det blevet mere relevant at se indad; på vores eget land, såvel som mod vores europæiske naboer. Det indebærer mange vigtige dele, herunder et samarbejde om handel og forsvar. Men mens vores politikere fokuserer på Europas hårde magt, vil jeg med dette nummer gerne invitere til et andet rum, hvor kulturen står i centrum.

stud.mag's mission er simpel: Vi er et tidsskrift drevet af studerende, der læser engelsk, spansk, tysk, fransk og italiensk med henblik på at vise de mange facetter af vores sprogstudier på tværs af fagligheder. Sprogene tilhører vidt forskellige lande med hver sin kultur, men alligevel skinner de hver især, når de står side om side med de andre Engerom-sprog. Hvis noget, synes jeg faktisk, at de skinner mere sammen.

Du har lige nu en farverig sammensætning af refleksioner i hænderne, hvor Engeroms sprog er bredt repræsenteret. Derfor håber jeg, at du vil læse denne udgave med følelsen af at lære noget nyt om de andre sprog. For når verden kan virke mørk og usikker, kan forståelsen af vores mangesidede kulturer være vores lys. Det handler om at forstå og anerkende vores forskelligheder og samtidigt mindes om, at vi er mere ens, end vi måske tror.

Rigtig god læselyst,

Jasmin Abdul-Hamid, august 2026

Indholdsfortegnelse

EFTERÅR 2026

NUMMER 2

'EIGHT' & 'Reapers'	6–7	Sabrina Skou
Franske Litteratursalon på Engerom	8	Tone Weltzin Kristensen
'twine'	9	Blendi Abduramani
The Rose in the Window	10–11	Jacob Heron Kobberbøl
Mano de Plata	12	Trine Kestner
Redaktionen anbefaler	13	Sabrina Skou
AfD i det tyske partisystem – højreradikale eller den lille mands stemme?	14–15	Asger Falkesgaard-Ohlsen
'What I know now'	16	Peter Beckwith-Christiansen
'Swimming in ice and winter'	17	Sarah Lynggaard
In Pursuit of Creation	18	Sarah Lynggaard
Redaktionen anbefaler	19	Augusta Eleonora Schultz
a stubborn pessimist's reflections on the use of AI in the humanities	20–23	Engelskstuderende
Verbario (Verbarium): acción pura y autonomía del verbo como formato de categoría poética abierta'	24–28	Eduardo Rodríguez Armando
Redaktionen anbefaler	29	Simon Norlin

'L'enfant de l'hiver'	30	Franskstuderende
Honour Forgotten	31	Simon Norlin
'Autofemicide'	32–33	Mathias M. F. Jakobsen
Engeroms krydsord	34–35	Daniel HH
The History of Anglistik at Københavns Universitet	36–41	Sean Källberg
'What makes a poem?'	42	Engelskstuderende
Redaktionen anbefaler	43	Ana Bratkova
At generere eller ikke at generere, dét er spørgsmålet	44–45	stud.mag (Sean Källberg)
Lucia Sánchez Saornil (med digte)	48–49	Lars Troels Møller
'Date night', 'Dogs days' og 'Step 3: Beautification (without evidence of martyrdom)'	50–51	Daniel HH
'Heavier Things'	52–53	Sean Källberg
'Bars, "bitches" og bias': Genobring og reproduktion af sexistisk sprog i tysk rap	54–57	Maria Mercedes M. Lindenskov
'Expropiado' & 'Escudando'	58–59	Eduardo Rodríguez Armando
References to Christianity in SKAM and Translational Quirks Across the SKAMverse	60–64	Augusta Eleonora Schultz

EIGHT

'Lay, slighted tongue. Mend, thieving heat.'
Treacherous hearth, raise me my greed.
Fruitful crater; a futile deceit.
Death grazed breaths; wounded swiper of creed—

Branded bough (chaste in chase of ailment)
Threads through latent blooms (fervorous aches; Blossomed blessings) as scathing fragrant (fright fed flora) perfume—forsakes.

Gold sun draped lair, light gleaming shield,
Sheathe me once more: love—cradles me.
Let these grief dressed greaves heal their wield
Of depth. Sworn calluses, steady,

Climb the rungs of wails. Solemn sheen,
Warding wreath, leave—a taste of saline.

Reapers

Mortality's first words uttered comes from hunger, then from Blame and blood seeps through
The placid ground we cultivate,
 'Till sin bears the saviour's fate.

Belief will be said and raped.
We will find nurture in our Past, present the child to
Our field's sheepish compare
 Where fathers sow their spare.

Nearing Chaos' warm years,
The rot will begin to reek
 From the old bough's shadow,
Where ever-gentle buds on straws
 Harbour the indent's defy of laws.

Earth will fill our open throat,
As heaviness will clench
 The feast which bears no mind
To a falling sky. Death-eared praying,
 Of pitch cries, for a beating heart.

Franske Litteratursaloner på Engerom

af Tone Weltzin Kristensen, franskstuderende

I forårssemesteret 2026 har en lille gruppe med frankofile fornemmelser indtaget Engeroms institutbibliotek til berigende diskussioner om litteratur.

Med et glimt i øjet, tog to bibliofile franskstuderende initiativ til fire litteratursaloner, der har til formål at skabe et fælles rum at dele læseglæde i. I skrivende stund er vi halvvejs i semesteret og har afholdt to af de fire månedlige arrangementer.

Der er ingen strittende lillefingre, det ydmyge mål er at skabe et interessefællesskab, der er i kontakt på tværs af årgangene på et studie, der desværre er så forsvindende lille, at fuldt fremmøde til undervisningen knapt kan fylde et grupperum. At støde på en ligesindet bibliofil på et studie der spænder over historie, kunst og kultur, politiske og samfundsmæssige forhold, lingvistisk teori og metode, kolonihistorie samt anti- og postkolonial kritik, oversættelse, grammatik, grammatik og grammatik, er ganske enkelt ikke givet. Mangfoldigheden blandt os studerende er lige så rig som uddannelsens indhold.

Netop denne mangfoldighed har været det spændende ved disse uformelle litteratursaloner; det er endnu ikke sket, at to studerende har medbragt samme værk.

Kravene til værkerne favner bredt: bøger skrevet af franske eller frankofone forfattere eller værker omhandlende Frankrig eller Frankofonien. Om de er læst på originalsprog eller i oversættelse eller en blanding er mindre vigtigt. Vi er jo alle i gang med at tilegne os sproget.

Alligevel har det været moderne skønlitteratur, der har domineret omkring det runde, lave bord. Vi har hørt om et kunsthistorisk gennemgangsværk i romanform; aktuelle prisvindende storværker; nyudgivelser, der leger med form og sprog i en historisk kontekst; en monstrøs, canadisk trilogi om moderjagt; et forfatterskab der altid søger efter det ufindelige; og værker, der ganske tidstypisk kredser om genealogi både autentisk og opdigtet.

Størstedelen af de fremmødte er selv kommet med et værk, de har læst og fundet anbefalelsesværdigt, mens andre er kommet for at finde inspiration og være med på en lytter. Til initiativtagernes glæde, har alle bidraget med nysgerrige spørgsmål. Helt andre igen er kommet med værker, de stadig er i gang med at læse, eller som de til deres fortvivlelse var gået i stå i, og derfor søgte nye læsevinkler hos de andre bogorme, for at komme videre med læsningen.

Alle bidrag er velkomne bidrag, og diskussionerne har efter de fremmødtes konsensus hovedsageligt foregået på uformelt fransk, med plads til forskellige niveauer og co-switching efter behov. Gruppen har bestået af både bachelor- og kandidatstuderende, og omgangstonen har været imødekomende, med en varm og støttende villighed til at forstå hinanden.

På initiativtagernes vegne vil jeg gerne takke den lille, hårde kerne af fremmødte for de spændende diskussioner, og jeg håber, at vi ses igen i efterårssemesteret 2026.

Hold øje med Absalonrummet Fransk Forum, hvor vi skriver ud, når datoerne i efterårssemesteret er fastlagte. Ved indgangsdøren til institutbiblioteket og ved Ambarssaden vil vi hænge en plakat op ved semesterstart.

twine

'where are you from?'

was it my face that gave it away something in the way it trespasses?
the features it possesses?

I'm not from here
I'm not from there
which one do I betray

here, I came and took what was yours filed my edges to fit into the mould with a shameful wish to be cured apologizing for being more

— but I didn't come, I was born
where you bruised your knees, I bruised mine learned the same tongue, line by line unsure if I can call it mine

there, I'm a foreigner too
I didn't swim in the harsh waves they do my fingers didn't bleed on the way home different holes under our soles

— yet I learned to hold onto the very tongue I was born to living in me like memory tying me to the ones before me

but when my tongue betrays and pronounces my name wrong —
tell me
where do I come from?

to think in one language and dream in another — is that what you need from me?

two strands
twisted into one thread

pull them apart —
and what is left?

Blendi Abduramani, student of English

The Rose in the Window

Jacob Heron Kobberbøl, student of English

I PASSED THE ROSE on my walk home that I had passed so many times before. The autumn leaves crackled under my feet, mocking me with the thought that the year was nearing its end. Yet this rose had not withered like they usually do at this time of year. Its petals had lost some of their luster, yet it appeared to me only more vibrant under the cold, uniform, overcast light. I thought back to the many pots I had sitting on top of the cabinets in my kitchen, each with its own unique colour and texture. I walked over to it and observed it up close. It truly was beautiful. On a whim, I reached out and grabbed it by the stem, but paused as the thorns pressed into my skin. The thought of leaving it to be buried when the snow came upset me, so I clenched my fingers around it, the pain radiating up my arm, and started to pull. I soon realised it would not budge, so I placed my other hand around it and pulled once again. I screamed as I pushed both feet into the ground and leaned back to use the weight of my body as leverage. I suddenly snapped backwards and tumbled onto the wet grass and mud. I still held onto the rose. Blood was dripping down my arms, but I had pulled the rose from the dirt, along with a clump of soil held together by its roots. My mind swelled with ecstatic relief; this rose must not be allowed to wither. I stood up and walked home with both hands still firmly around the rose's stem.

As soon as I stepped through the door to my flat, I looked toward the pots sitting on top of the cabinets. I picked a pot to plant it in. It was a dull, greyish-green, a colour which reminded me of the foliage surrounding where the rose had once grown. I found an open bag of soil that had been sitting in a closet since my last attempt, placed the rose in the pot and carefully poured in soil until about halfway. It was leaning a little to one side, and the table around it was covered in a thin layer of soil that had been spilt in the process, but I could feel the fast, heavy beats in my chest as my heart swelled with pride. I picked it up and placed it on the windowsill that received the most sunlight. It had been hours since I pulled it from the earth, but only now did I notice the small wounds that covered both my palms.

The rose lived through the winter. I watered it every day and fed it fertilizer every couple of weeks. It had soon grown to twice its size. New branches were sprouting forth with small buds at their tips. Every day, I would return home and hope that one had sprouted. I would sit and watch it for hours. When next autumn was approaching, the rose had once again grown to twice its size, and in the evening light, its shadow painted the room in dark, chaotic lines.

One day, I bought a pair of pruning shears when nearly half the window was covered, and the room had become considerably darker. With the shears in hand, I carefully grabbed a branch, but as I was about to cut, my lip began to quiver. The rose was as beautiful as ever. No, it was more beautiful than ever. How could I dare cut it? My body grew weak. The shears slipped and made a cut across my palm as they fell. As I curled up in pain, something caught my eye: a streak of sunlight shone through the thicket in the window and struck the blade of the shears, covered in blood. "A cruel miracle," I thought, "to have such a beautiful thing share the same hue as my blood."

The rose barely let any light in after a while. I had to move my bed to the other side of the room as the branches began to stretch over it. The cut in my palm had healed, but had left a noticeable scar, never painful, yet uncomfortable.

The smell of roses would greet me every morning as I woke, but one day I felt this lump in my stomach, and having noticed it, I could not recall when that feeling had begun. I had forgotten the view outside my window and the warmth of morning rays. I got out of bed. I stood as close as I could to the rose's branches without pressing myself against them, moving my head to try to find a gap between the branches big enough for me to see through to the outside. I tried to push some branches to the side, but was deterred by the pain of the thorns. I tried the next morning again. Again, the day after, and the day after that, until one morning I pushed hard enough for one of the thorns to break skin. As I saw the small, round drop form on my finger, I felt this pain in my being, and in a manic rush, I thrust my arms into the thicket and dug through it, the searing pain numbing my senses. I did not stop. The thorns ripped my hands and forearms, and among the sound of the moving branches and leaves, I could hear blood hitting the floor. When a beam of light was suddenly let through, it forced my eyes shut. As I gathered the strength to pry them open, I gazed upon an overcast morning sky, lit by a rising sun that had yet to appear on the horizon. The colour was that of the rose's petals.

Mano de Plata

Trine Kestner,
spanskstuderende

—Creamos nuestra propia empresa... transporte a caballo.

—¿Para quién?

—Para todos los que no quieren ser registrados. A menos que prefieras distribuir su geografía... por razones sociales... por supuesto, y por la divinidad de la eficiencia: dice que menos, es más, ¿no? ¿Qué otra cosa podría ser?

—No tengo nada que ocultar.

—Yo tampoco, solo esta historia —Mano de Plata le guiñó un ojo a la murena.

—Estás paranoico otra vez —respondió ella rápidamente, mientras jugaba distraídamente con la tarjeta de plástico azul y blanca entre los dedos, unas de las últimas. El metro avanzaba dando bandazos; así era siempre entre Fields y Bella Sky. Poco después preguntó pensativa:

—¿Quién es el dueño del archivo?

—La compañía telefónica, supongo... sus accionistas, o como se llame... El archivo, lo registrado, pertenece tanto a ellos como a la empresa de transporte —respondió Mano de Plata—. Ojalá terminemos en la misma tribu.

—¿De qué hablas? Pero si somos del mismo país.

—Los países desaparecerán; solo quedarán tribus. ¿Qué compañía tienes? —preguntó él.

—¡La misma que tú! Fuiste tú quien me hizo cambiar. ¿Te has vuelto completamente demente?

—¡Ah, sí! Uf... porque ¿cómo podría vivir sin ti... después de todo lo del ciervo?

—Fuiste tú misma quien decidió el asunto con ese animal —dijo ella en voz baja y luego un poco más alto:

—Pero hablando en serio, ¿de verdad te someterías a un par de restricciones tribales si acabáramos en tribus distintas?

—¡Claro que no! Justo aquí entra el transporte a caballo... Pero ¿has pensado alguna vez en lo que pasará cuando ya no existan billetes ni monedas en el mundo?

—Entonces será aburrido darles dinero de bolsillo a los niños. Y una forma de control, supongo. Quizá la cripto explote —propuso la murena.

—Entonces nos volveremos esclavos —respondió Mano de Plata con calma. —¿Y lo aceptarías? No te creo. No me decepciones, Mano de Plata.

—Intercambiamos. Cosas, servicios. Empieza el gran trueque. Se levantó; la murena lo siguió, aunque aquella no era su estación. Ella le gritó a través de la puerta abierta del metro:

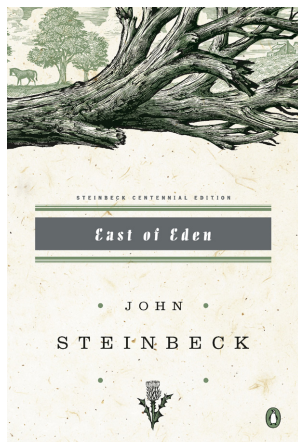

—Suenas bastante medieval, pero acepto tu solución. ¡Gracias! ¡Un beso al aire voló en su dirección!

—¡Es solo un borrador! —le gritó de vuelta, mientras se alejaba rodando con una sonrisa en los labios.

Sabrina Skou,
engelskstuderende fra

redaktionen anbefaler følgende bøger, film og musikalske værker

BØGER

Arthur Rimbaud – A Season in Hell & The Drunken Boat
John Steinbeck – East of Eden
James Baldwin – Giovanni's Room
Mikhail Bulgakov – The Master and the Margarita
Anne Carson – If not, Winter

FILM

The Time That Remains (Palæstina)
Autumn Sonata (Sverige)
Kung Fu Hustle (Kina)
Only Yesterday (Japan, anime)
3 Idiots (Indien)

MUSIK

Colin Stetson - The Righteous Wrath of an Honorable Man (Instrumental, sang)
Bleachers - Merry Christmas, Please Don't Call (single)
BUCK-TICK - Darker than darkness style 93 (album)
Sufjan Stevens - Carrie & Lowell (10th Anniversary Edition)

AfD i det tyske partisystem – højreradikale eller den lille mands stemme?

af Asger Falkesgaard-Ohlsen, tyskstuderende

ALTERNATIVE FÜR DEUTSCHLAND (AfD) har inden for få år udviklet sig til et af de største partier i Tyskland og besidder i 2026 150 ud af 630 pladser i den tyske forbundsdag. Dette rejser et centralt spørgsmål om, hvilken rolle AfD spiller i det tyske partisystem. Bør partiet forstås som et talerør for marginaliserede vælgere eller som en forlængelse af den tyske højreradikalisme – og sætter partiet samtidig det tyske demokrati under pres?

AfD har historisk set ikke været en ideologisk homogen størrelse. Man taler om, at der oprindeligt eksisterede tre fløje i AfD: en liberalkonservativ, der tenderede mod den politiske midte; en nationalkonservativ, der især fokuserede på kulturel og national identitet, men samtidig betonedede socialstatens rolle; en deutschnational fløj, der – som navnet antyder – især lagde vægt på den nationalistiske dimension (Pfahl-Traughber 2019). Denne opdeling i tre fløje gjaldt dog primært i partiets tidlige år. Siden AfD's landsmøde i 2022 er det til stadighed blevet tydeligere, at den folkelige-nationalistiske fløj dominerer partilinen, og repræsentanter for en klar afgrænsning mod højre spiller næppe nogen rolle i dag (Schroeder & Weißels 2023).

AfD er først og fremmest et højrepopulistisk parti, der kritiserer det etablerede system. Partiet hævder at repræsentere den brede befolkning, særligt dem, der føler sig forsømt og marginaliseret – frem for samfundets elite (Decker 2022). Dette perspektiv kan forstås i lyset af den hollandske politolog Cas Mudde, som definerer populisme således:

(...) a thin-centered ideology that considers society to be ultimately separated into two homogeneous and antagonistic camps, 'the pure people' versus 'the corrupt elite', and which argues that politics should be an expression of the volonté générale (general will) of the people.

Populismen beskriver det modsatrettede forhold mellem "folket" og "eliten". Folket som de moralsk gode og pure, eliten som corrupt og fjern fra befolkningen (Mudde & Kaltwasser 2018). Partiet betoner samtidig værdier, der i en vis forstand ikke er forenelige med et demokratisk samfund. AfD er sågar blevet betegnet som „systemsprenghendes, demokratiegefährdendes Sammelbecken“ (systemnedbrydende, demokratitruende samlingspunkt), hvilket understreges af partiets etno-nationalistiske dagsorden, afvisning af kulturel pluralisme og populistiske praksisser. Der opstår derved en diskrepans, idet partiet på den ene side forsøger at appellere til den ikke-privilegerede del af befolkningen, der føler sig marginaliseret, men på samme tid fører en politik, der delvist truer det demokratiske systems grundlag (Schroeder & Weißels 2020).

Siden Tysklands genforening har der været forsøg på at etablere et "völkisch-autoritäre" (folkeligt-autoritært) parti i Tyskland (Virchow 2020), og AfD kan ses som en fortsættelse af denne tradition. Ekstremisme kan defineres som en „Sammelbezeichnung für alle politischen Auffassungen und Handlungen, die sich gegen die Grundlagen moderner Demokratie (...) wenden“ (samlebetegnelse for alle politiske opfattelser og handlinger, der vender sig mod moderne demokratiers grundlag). AfD har siden sin grundlæggelse netop udviklet sig fra en i højere grad højredemokratisk til højreekstrem orientering, hvilket for eksempel kommer til udtryk med partiets relativering af antisemitisme og NS-fortiden (Pfahl-Traughber 2019). AfD kan i den forbindelse ses som resultatet af et projekt, som højreekstreme kræfter i Tyskland siden Anden Verdenskrig har arbejdet hen imod, og partiet må derfor betragtes som en fortsættelse af en længere tradition – en tradition, der bygger bro mellem den traditionelle højreradikalisme og en nyere, populistisk tankegang (Virchow 2020).

I krisetider opstår en art populistisk moment – når politikerne ikke formår at repræsentere bestemte sociale grupper. I sådanne situationer forsøger mange politikere at distancere sig fra både partipolitik og “politikrerhvervet”. Netop dette gjorde sig gældende for AfD, som opnåede stigende opbakning gennem en øget polarisering over for de etablerede partier, herunder særligt de venstreorienterede (Bebnowski 2015). AfD består derudover af flere forskellige typer populisme. De kan indordnes under både social-, kriminal-, national- og radikalpopulismen og forsøger så at sige dels at forsvare velfærdsstaten og de nedre samfundslag samt repræsentere en stram linje over for kriminelle, dels at fokusere på det nationale og konstruktionen af et os og dem. Grundlæggende beror denne strategi på en vedvarende positionering i opposition til det etablerede politiske system – et system, som angiveligt ikke repræsenterer folket (Virchow 2020).

Debatten om, hvorvidt AfD sætter det tyske demokrati under pres, er fortsat åben. Partiet er i den forbindelse blevet betragtet som en form for „Erpressungspartei” (afpresningsparti) – et parti, der igennem konfrontationer og en tiltagende polariserende retorik presser de andre partier (Schroeder & Weßels 2020). AfD har dermed bidraget til en øget polarisering i den politiske debat. Historikeren Jan-Werner Müller formulerer i sit essay „Ende der Parteiendemokratie?”, at populismen udgør en stor udfordring for partidemokratiets i dag. Dette hænger sammen med, at populistere gør krav på alene at repræsentere folket, hvilket udelukker den demokratiske debat. I stedet benytter de en retorik, hvor politiske modstandere eksempelvis fremstilles som korrupte (Müller 2025). Set i forlængelse af AfD’s populistiske karakter kan man derfor argumentere for, at partiets retorik kan tænkes at bidrage til en indsnævring af den demokratiske samtale.

I Tyskland er den stigende polarisering særlig bemærkelsesværdig grundet landets historie. Samtidig er udviklingen ikke enestående. Også i USA ses en tiltagende polarisering, hvor højreorienterede strømninger præger den offentlige debat. I Danmark har lignende tendenser vist sig med fremkomsten af nye højreorienterede partier, der på mange måder kan anskues som populistiske. Et eksempel herpå er Danmarksdemokraterne, der som strategi opsætter et tydeligt modsætningsforhold mellem det korrupte, etablerede politiske samfundssystem og det rene folk (Widfeldt 2023).

Samlet set har AfD i stigende grad udviklet sig til et højreradikalt parti. Selvom partiet i begyndelsen bestod af flere fløje, dominerer den højreekstreme fløj i dag, mens de national- og liberalkonservative fløje efterhånden spiller en langt mindre rolle. Man kan konstatere, at AfD har formået at bygge bro mellem den traditionelle højreradikalisme og en nyere, mere populistisk tankegang. Denne populisme består af flere dimensioner, men er først og fremmest kendetegnet ved en vedvarende opposition til det etablerede politiske system. Afslutningsvis kan AfD betragtes som en form for afpresningsparti, der gennem konfrontationer og polariserende retorik lægger pres på de andre politiske partier i Tyskland.

Bibliografi

- Bebnowski, D. (2015). Die Alternative für Deutschland. Aufstieg und gesellschaftliche Repräsentanz einer rechten populistischen Partei. S. 33-39. Wiesbaden: Springer VS.
- Decker, F. (2022). „Die Programmatik der AfD”. In: Bundeszentrale für politische Bildung (bpb). Tilgængelig under: <https://www.bpb.de/themen/parteien/parteien-in-deutschland/afd/273132/die-programmatik-der-afd/> (Zugriff am 27.11.2025).
- Mudde, C. & Rovira Kaltwasser, C. (2018). Populism: a very short introduction. New York, New York: Oxford University Press.
- Müller, J.W. (2025). „Ende der Parteiendemokratie?”. In: Aus Politik und Zeitgeschichte, 75. Jahrgang, 27–28/2025. Tilgængelig under: https://www.bpb.de/system/files/dokument_pdf/APuZ_2025-27-28_online.pdf (Zugriff am 1.12.2025).
- Pfahl-Traughber, A. (2019). Die AfD und der Rechtsextremismus: eine Analyse aus politikwissenschaftlicher Perspektive (1. Aufl. 2019 edition.). Springer VS. Tilgængelig under: <https://doi.org/10.1007/978-3-658-25180-2>.
- Schroeder, W., & Weßels, B. (2023). Radikalisiert und etabliert. Die AfD vor dem Superwahljahr. Frankfurt am Main: Otto Brenner Stiftung (Arbeitspapier 59). Tilgængelig under: https://www.otto-brenner-stiftung.de/fileadmin/user_data/stiftung/02_Wissenschaftsportal/03_Publikationen/AP59_AfD_Schroeder_Wessels.pdf (Zugriff am 25.11.2025).
- Schroeder, W., & Weßels, B. (2020). „Die Alternative für Deutschland: Eine gefährliche Kraft im gesellschaftlichen Wandel”. In: Sozial extra, 44(2), 97–101. Tilgængelig under: <https://doi.org/10.1007/s12054-020-00268-5>.
- Virchow, F. (2020). „Alternative für Deutschland (AfD): eine Partei der extremen Rechten”. In: Notes du Cerfa, 152. Tilgængelig under: https://www.ifri.org/sites/default/files/migrated_files/documents/atoms/files/virchow_afd_extremen_rechten_2020.pdf (Zugriff am 26.11.2025).
- Widfeldt, Anders (2023). “Den radikale højrepopulismes vækst i de nordiske lande”. I: Det Nye Nordiske Leksikon. Tilgængelig under: <https://nordics.info/da/nnl/vis/artikel/den-radikale-hoejrepopulismes-vaekst-i-de-nordiske-lande> (hentet d. 13.3.2026).

What I now know (27/3/26)

My heart's a cage of guilt and doubt
I wish I'd walked a different route
I should have clasped your guiding hand back then when you gave me the chance but now I'm here on this lone path what use is there in looking back?
on yet another past mistake
staring will not make it fade
it's only gonna make it glow too brightly with what I now know.

Peter Beckwith-Christiansen, student of English

Swimming in ice and winter

In November

Your nose started bleeding

Holding a towel up to your face, the crimson dripping down my arm

You're apologising about the liquid of your heart staining me

Do you know nothing at all

I sat on a wooden pier in January, half falling apart

Wrapped in my scarf, gloves and the scent of you

I told you you were crazy for going in the water

You told me that it's good to feel your blood moving to know that you're alive

Your hand touched mine as you grabbed your towel

Still November stained

But you haven't seen yourself in winter sun

What do you know about being alive

- January 2026

Sarah Lynggarrd, student of English

In Pursuit of Creation:

ON SONGWRITING

by Sarah Lynggard,
student of English

Music has an undeniably lengthy and rich history and cultural relevance and plays a role in every modern person's life. Therefore, when the opportunity presented itself, I expanded my creative horizons beyond writing poetry into songwriting. I got the pleasure of co-writing track 4 (Amelia's Daughter) and track 6 (House by the Coast) on the indie-folk EP The Shores by the talented Wynd.

The EP is methodically melancholic in the unpacking of complex personal affairs, accompanied by gentle melody and introspection. Both "Amelia's Daughter" and "House by the Coast" are conceptual songs that follow a narrative structure, guiding the listeners through the song and provoking emotion in tandem with the created storyline. "Amelia's Daughter" is from the perspective of a man calling the mother of a woman he was in a relationship with some 30 years after the dissolution of their love affair. Centered around the universal yearning for what could've been, the narrative voice travels through nostalgia, doubt and reflection before ultimately ending in an acceptance of the futility of the call. The narrator's revelation is accompanied by the listener's revelation that the call is only hypothetical, as the ending lines of the song reveal that he never made the call after all:

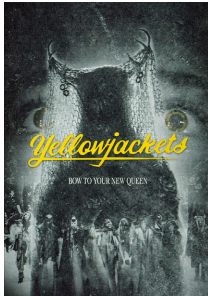

Amelia gives no answer
There's just silence on the line
Cause I never dialed her number
Oh, I've wasted too much time
But that's what I would've told her
If I picked up the phone
But I think it's better if I leave her troubled mind alone.

In "House by the Coast" we focused on the feeling of being indebted to the endless sacrifices that parents make for their children. The central idea takes the form of a wish to purchase a dream home for your parents to live and retire comfortably in. In this track we wanted to make the lyrics more linguistically interesting by focusing on literary devices such as metaphors and alliteration. This led to lines like "Salt from the sea sticking to the ceiling" which are both imagery-filled and audibly interesting. "House by the Coast" is the final track of the EP, ending in a repetitive structure with the sound of waves crashing onto the shores, rounding out the project on an ambient and thematic note.

The beautiful thing about this songwriting experience is the true collaborative effort of writing the lyrics. Only a few lines are exclusively written by one or the other. We were able to create so many lines by almost offering one word at a time, using each other to establish the best possible fit in the rhyme, coming back later to lines in the beginning, revising etc. It gave a completely contrastive creative experience to that of writing poetry. To me poetry is an entirely personal and secluded affair not to be shared by others often even after finishing the work. Creative endeavors offer personal and interpersonal gain, and to me, a creative effort is never wasted. In conclusion, listen to the songs we wrote! Or write your own! Or both!

"TV-serier til dig med en forvrænget forståelse af kærlighed"

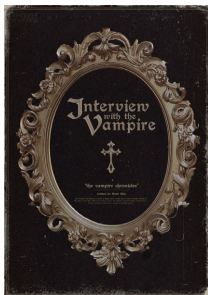

Yellowjackets

- Kendte ansigter: Ella Purnell, Sophie Thatcher, Melanie Lynskey, Christina Ricci, Jasmin Savoy Brown
- Canon WLW
- Okkultisme og kannibalisme

Hannibal

- Kendte ansigter: Mads Mikkelsen, Hugh Dancy, Gillian Anderson, Laurence Fishburne
- Mental MLM
- Okkultisme og kannibalisme

Interview with the Vampire

- Kendte ansigter: Jacob Andersen, Sam Reid, Bailey Bass, Delainey Hayles, Assad Zaman
- Canon MLM + WLW
- Okkultisme og kannibalisme

Arrested Development

- Kendte ansigter: Jason Bateman, David Cross, Michael Cera, Will Arnett, Alia Shawcat, Tony Hale (+ de vildeste gæstestjerner)
- Misforstået MLM
- Incæst

a stubborn pessimist's reflections on the use of AI in the humanities

by a student of English

Bashing of AI has, for a long time now, revolved around ridiculing the products delivered by such programs. The problem with this approach is that AI quality has and will continue to improve, tricking a much broader segment than only half-senile grandparents on Facebook and delivering factual results that can contend with long-established encyclopaedias. This is not meant to defend AI, but rather to challenge the frequently used argumentation against, especially generative AI that mainly frames the problem as the lack of quality in the products provided. Even if all the results (be it essays, realistic pictures, stylised art, etc.) were satisfactory in terms of style and content, the crucial issues lie in the process.

Critical analysis is the foundation of the humanities. Engaging with both reading and writing as conscious acts that shape our understanding of and engagement with the world is an incredibly informative process. Not only does having a large language model perform this analysis for you weaken your own abilities, but chatbots are designed to please. They are essentially 'yes, and' machines that, as long as they do not directly threaten shareholder interests, should always make the users want to come back again. Discourse and disagreement are incredibly important for research and education – but they are deterrents for business. And critical engagement is a threat to the spreading notion that the ever-growing presence of AI is an inevitability. One year ago, the American Department of Government Efficiency (DOGE), then led by Elon Musk, abruptly cancelled millions of dollars in federal grants intended for the humanities and cultural institutions across the country.¹ Amidst this, Musk's own AI 'Grok' was spreading far-right views, such as praising Adolf Hitler and backing conspiracy theories of a so-called 'white genocide' in South Africa when prompted on completely unrelated topics.² While not all instances of AI are this clearly laced with ideology and attempts to control the spread of information, it lends itself as a prime example of the dangers of putting blind faith in tools controlled by a select few corporations and political agents.

I must also acknowledge a bias when it comes to my abilities in AI. To say that I am AI-critical would be an understatement. In fact, regarding this subject, I find myself to be both stubborn and seemingly pessimistic. I have never used a chatbot, I disable all possible tracking, and I try to remember adding ‘-ai’ to any Google search to spare myself the AI-overview. Therefore, I may very well lack the personal hands-on experience to fully judge the capabilities of AI. Perhaps all this will one day become a major hindrance for me, but, in the context of anecdotal evidence, it has become a reassurance as well. AI is not an inevitability. Despite what certain ChatGPT-enthusiasts lectured me about before I started university, it is very well possible to keep up with a modern degree without using AI. It requires work and will, without a doubt, entail certain ‘failures’ along the way, but since when are those considered bad qualities of a learning process?

¹ Blair, 'Cultural groups across U.S. told that federal humanities grants are terminated', NPR, 03/04/2025, <https://www.npr.org/2025/04/03/nx-si-5350994/neh-grants-cut-humanities-doge-trump>

² Lisa Hagen et al., 'Elon Musk's AI chatbot, Grok, started calling itself 'MechaHitler'', NPR, 09/07/2025, <https://www.npr.org/2025/07/09/nx-si-5462609/grok-elon-musk-antisemitic-racist-content>

American teacher Joseph Fasano wrote a poem titled ‘For a Student Who Used AI to Write a Paper’ (2023) that I often think about. It goes:

Now I let it fall back in the grasses.
I hear you. I know
this life is hard now.
I know your days are precious
on this earth.
But what are you trying to be free of?
The living? The miraculous task of it?
Love is for the ones who love the work.

I do not think we should ever stop asking ourselves, ‘what are you trying to be free of?’ when resorting to the seductive quick-fix solutions and bids for our attention that are so readily available to us. While academic work may be difficult, frustrating and at certain times seem pointless, attending university is both a choice and a privilege. Why should we run from the very foundations of learning? Focusing solely on an end product ignores, as Fasano puts it, ‘The miraculous / task of it’, and all the value derived from facing the difficult. While they are important skills for anyone, critical thinking, argumentation and proper research are paramount to any academic context, and no skill is honed by outsourcing the practice.

Additionally, universities do not exist outside the context of the world. Even in a highly fictitious world where the products of AI have reached a standard worthy of academia, and the generative process engages the users in a manner encouraging discussion and friction-based learning, there would remain issues with its use. Massive amounts of water, energy and labour are required to keep the data centres running. It is hard to defend the hypocrisy of teaching students of the humanities to listen to marginalised voices while actively using tools exploiting poor neighbourhoods and the global south. A Forbes article states that 'Black Americans are 75% more likely than the rest of the population to live near facilities that produce toxic waste, which worsens health disparities like asthma and cancer'³ and workers in Kenya have reported severe mental stress after working as reviewers of content filtering out sexual violence, hate-speech and child abuse from internet sources before it is sent to train chatbots.⁴

Some split AI into the 'good' analytical AI that scientists and doctors use, and the 'bad' generative AI that fuels chatbots and steals from artists, but that does not hold up to much scrutiny. Some generative AI is vital in new medical processes, and likewise, analytical AI would be the basis of criminal identification within the police - a process known to have clear racial biases.⁵ As with so many other powerful technological tools, I believe there should be a difference between giving relevant access to professionals within essential humanitarian fields and in the hands of every single citizen with access to a smartphone, as well as giant corporations.

There are still many uncertainties within the world of AI. Whether it is a permanent fixture that will continue to expand rapidly for many years or a bubble on the brink of bursting is both unknown and, as an individual, difficult to influence. Regardless, whether for or against AI, critical thinking is dire to decide how much one wants to participate in the usage of the available technology. We must be conscious of the choices we make and the consequences thereof. Staying hopeful for quick and easy (not to mention profitable) solutions might tempt, but it is naïve to believe they will suddenly appear. Instead, I believe we should acknowledge that an AI-dependent future is not an inevitability, but rather a choice in which, however marginal, we do have a say.

³ Nyandoro, Aisha, 'The Rush To Build AI Data Centers Leaves Black Workers With New Risks', Forbes, 20/10/2025. <https://www.forbes.com/sites/aishanyandoro/2025/10/20/the-rush-to-build-ai-data-centers-leaves-black-workers-with-new-risks/>

⁴ Rowe, Niamh, 'It's destroyed me completely': Kenyan moderators decry toll of training of models', The Guardian, 02/08/2023. <https://www.theguardian.com/technology/2023/aug/02/ai-chatbot-training-human-toll-content-moderator-meta-openai>

⁵ Wilding, Boffey, 'UK police forces lobbied to use biased facial recognition technology', The Guardian, 10/12/2025. <https://www.theguardian.com/technology/2025/dec/10/police-facial-recognition-technology-bias>

Bibliography

- Blair, Elizabeth, 'Cultural groups across U.S. told that federal humanities grants are terminated', NPR, 03/04/2025. <https://www.npr.org/2025/04/03/nx-si-5350994/neh-grants-cut-humanities-doge-trump>
- Fasano, Joseph, 'For a Student Who Used AI to Write a Paper', poets.org, 2023. <https://poets.org/poem/student-who-used-ai-write-paper>
- Hagen, Lisa, Huo Jingnan, Audrey Nguyen, 'Elon Musk's AI chatbot, Grok, started calling itself 'MechaHitler'', NPR, 09/07/2025. <https://www.npr.org/2025/07/09/nx-si-5462609/grok-elon-musk-antisemitic-racist-content>
- Nyandoro, Aisha, 'The Rush To Build AI Data Centers Leaves Black Workers With New Risks', Forbes, 20/10/2025. <https://www.forbes.com/sites/aishanyandoro/2025/10/20/the-rush-to-build-ai-data-centers-leaves-black-workers-with-new-risks/>
- Rowe, Niamh, 'It's destroyed me completely': Kenyan moderators decry toll of training of AI models', The Guardian, 02/08/2023. <https://www.theguardian.com/technology/2023/aug/02/ai-chatbot-training-human-toll-content-moderator-meta-openai>
- Wilding, Boffey, Boffey, Daniel, 'UK police forces lobbied to use biased facial recognition technology', The Guardian, 10/12/2025. <https://www.theguardian.com/technology/2025/dec/10/police-facial-recognition-technology-bias>

Verbario (Verbarium): acción pura y autonomía del verbo como formato de categoría poética abierta

por Eduardo Rodríguez Armando

En mi periplo por usar mi intención, mi atención y mi energía en una etapa de redescubrimiento y crecimiento, he hallado un gusto por adentrarme en aquel saber que genere valor agregado a mi espíritu, considerándolo un alimento sustancioso e intangible que me permite nutrir la corporeidad que da vida a la interpretación que de este plano puedo permitirme realizar.

En tal sentido, me he encontrado gratamente sorprendido por el placer que la estética gramatical me genera cuando la ejerzo como sujeto activo para pretender dominar, sin posibilidad de éxito, un caballo indómito que corre abiertamente por las sabanas del género lírico.

Estando en esta suerte de microcosmos llamado Universidad, tuve la fortuna de coincidir con una provocación teórica, la “elipsis”. Me pareció fascinante el ejercicio de leer, y luego experimentar la técnica de la elipsis verbal, y el vacío que ella permite al lector dentro del formato de los poemas nominales. Pero esta “calistenia creativa” me dejó inquieto y sembró en mí la semilla de la duda: Si la tradición moderna pudo experimentar con la sustracción hasta producir poemas sin verbo, nombres o pronombres¹; ¿Qué ocurriría si el experimento se condujese sistemáticamente en sentido contrario; y el verbo, actor principal de la vida comunicativa, fuese el único centro del territorio poético?

Al intentar responder la interrogante, acudió a mi mente una famosa estrofa del considerado segundo himno nacional de Venezuela, el “Alma Llanera”; a saber: “(...) Amo, lloro, canto, sueño (...)” y recordé que en una oportunidad me explicaron que dicho extracto fue considerado parte del análisis de la poesía experimental del siglo XX, la cuál intentó demostrar que la innovación no depende solo del tema, sino de la posibilidad de reorganizar el lenguaje como materia, espacio y tensiones. Por lo que pensé, ante posibles detractores, que este atrevimiento de imaginar una poética fundada en la autocracia verbal no contradecía la tradición experimental, sino que dialoga con ella y la amplía en el debate. En tal sentido, propongo un compromiso de fidelidad al verbo, pero siempre subordinado a la creación de una dramaturgia verbal donde es necesario que dichos verbos produzcan trayecto, caída, conflicto, giro, retorno, y mutación; para consolidar una arquitectura poética sólida.

¹ La Academy of American Poets define la verbless poetry como poesía escrita sin verbos; ese antecedente funciona aquí como contrapunto teórico del Verbario (Verbarium).

Sin embargo, antes de iniciar cualquier planteamiento me propuse verificar si ese terreno que yo intuía como inexplorado, en realidad lo estaba. La respuesta, luego de revisar fuentes académicas y portales especializados, no fue absoluta, pero sí es lo bastante clara como para sostener una formulación prudente: al menos hasta ahora; no encontré un formato dentro del género lírico académico relativo a poemas verbales, consolidado e idéntico a lo que aquí propongo.

Responsablemente, advierto que sí aparecieron formas vecinas, principalmente entre poetas modernistas y contemporáneos; pero atadas a extractos de secuencias de acción o versos emocionales dentro del estilo impresionista o experimental; pero no como único recurso léxico, ni tampoco como un tipo de poema que la teoría literaria tradicional hubiera considerado formalmente. Por ejemplo, el grupo Oulipo que plantea que la restricción puede ser un motor de invención literaria. Pero lo más cercano a este intento, lo hallé en la investigación que Orpheu Luz Leal quien formuló el llamado “poema verbal en portugués”, (Oulipo n.d.; Leal 2013, 2014). Pero como una forma fija, mucho más cerrada, limitada a pocos versos y a reglas estrictas de composición. Es decir, mientras que en la investigación de Luz Leal hay una plantilla cerrada², en esta propuesta hay una poética abierta donde no hace falta pureza absoluta, porque el enfoque no es prohibir, sino asegurar el predominio verbal; con el propósito de que el criterio sea estructural y dinámico, no coercitivo. Por tanto, mientras la propuesta de Leal puede considerarse una modalidad compositiva, mi propuesta aspira a ser una categoría poética.

A partir de la delimitación y aspectos mencionados, decidí llamar a esta propuesta: Verbario (Verbarium). Su novedad no consiste en afirmar que nadie escribió previamente poemas donde el verbo cargue con el peso del poema; sino en la pretensión de sistematizar esa posibilidad como forma abierta, replicable y enseñable. El Verbario (Verbarium) no propone inundar el espacio, sino equilibrarlo con acción, respiración y tránsito. Su estructura fluye buscando hallar el equilibrio entre la acción verbal y la composición escrita; por lo que el verbo deja de ser un simple recurso gramatical para convertirse en fuerza, tensión y eje de la experiencia pero gravitando en una composición tripartita donde cohabita con los espacios y la alineación del texto.

Defino, por tanto, el Verbario (Verbarium) como un poema breve o mediano compuesto predominantemente por verbos y formas verbalizadas, cuyo sentido se organiza como secuencia de acciones, percepciones, impulsos o estados dinámicos, con sujeto suprimido y con una economía deliberada de elementos no verbales. Su objetivo es la reducción del poema a su núcleo, la acción; prescindiendo del

² Debe tener entre cuatro y ocho versos. Contener solo verbos, locuciones verbales, participios/adjetivos derivados de verbos, pronombres personales, el adverbio “não” y la conjunción “e”; pudiendo añadir un monóstico final libre. En una formulación anterior, incluso se presentaba como una sola estrofa con máximo de ocho versos.

sujeto, del objeto y de la explicación para dejar solo el movimiento.

Por añadidura, el Verbario (Verbarium) conforma un sistema lírico abierto basado en el predominio del verbo como motor rítmico, secuencial y semántico del poema; donde el sentido no se construye por sintaxis, sino por secuencia, y la emoción emerge del ritmo. Todo esto en una composición en la cual el mundo no se nombra, sino que ocurre; y el equilibrio se logra con el diseño de verbos que cohabitan en espacios y alineaciones que lo tensionan y van dando forma y sentido a la historia.

Por tanto, considero que sus normas pueden formularse con claridad: Primera: debe haber predominio verbal; Se permiten formas conjugadas, gerundios y participios usados como acción. Segunda: el sujeto permanece ausente, porque aquí importa más el acto que el actor. Tercera: el verso ha de concentrar uno o dos núcleos de acción, para evitar la dispersión. Cuarta: se admiten tiempos, modos, infinitivos, gerundios y participios, siempre que conserven energía verbal. Entendiendo que el sentido no depende de la sintaxis, sino de la secuencia de acciones. Quinta: los otros elementos gramaticales sólo deben intervenir si sostienen el pulso. Por ejemplo, el uso expresivo de la puntuación. Sexta: no basta con enumerar; debe existir progresión, giro, caída, ascenso o retorno. Séptima: el espacio debe funcionar como respiración o asfixia de la acción y sus implicaciones; y la alineación como centro gravitacional del texto, pudiendo ser un marcador temporal. Por tanto espacios y alineación no son elementos pasivos, también narran. En esta dinámica se plantea la arquitectura de la composición. Octava: el cierre ha de producir una mutación.³

Estas reglas no pretenden ser dogma sino piedra fundacional; por tanto no nacen de una taxonomía burocrática, sino del laboratorio mismo del poema; y son el intento de narrar habitando mínimamente el lienzo, por lo cual cada verbo es un latido, una decisión, un corte y debe evitarse contaminarlo con fórmulas que sofoquen el impulso inicial, el desarrollo y el desenlace. En líneas generales, el Verbario (Verbarium) hace, y en ese hacer va revelando.

Dicho esto, es importante dejar claro que lo decisivo aquí no es la pureza gramatical absoluta, sino el cauce que le conferimos a las tensiones y emociones que nos encontramos al elaborar un Verbario (Verbarium). Ante ese encuentro, y equilibrando espacios, verbos y la alineación creamos un centro gravitacional, en el que el texto produce un recorrido donde la experiencia no es contada desde fuera, sino que es ejecutada en el interior del lienzo, convocando una pequeña dramaturgia: avances, pausas, repliegues, heridas, exclamación, muerte, despertar; etc.

Como valor agregado, puedo mencionar que desde el punto de vista didáctico, esta propuesta encuentra un lugar natural en la enseñanza del español. En tal sentido, David Hanauer ha defendido la escritura poética como una forma de meaningful literacy⁴, es decir, como una práctica capaz de humanizar el aula al devolverle al estudiante el centro de la experiencia lingüística, y que mejor forma que invitar a este sistema abierto para que el estudiante cree y conceda significado y sentido.

³ Ejemplo mínimo de cierre transformativo: «Entro / dudo / callo / vuelvo / salgo». La mutación no depende de una anécdota externa, sino del desplazamiento verbal interno del poema.

Además, en correspondencia con mi área de estudio actual, es significativo rescatar el aporte de Charlotte Melin, quien en su artículo "Between the lines: When culture, language and poetry meet in the classroom" (2010) considera que la poesía sirve como un espacio seguro para que los estudiantes de idiomas experimenten con el lenguaje, rompan normas convencionales y desarrollen competencias interculturales. Adicionalmente, señala que en contextos de segunda lengua, la poesía obliga a negociar simultáneamente forma, cultura, lectura y experiencia. Por lo que el Verbario (Verbarium) es un terreno donde los estudiantes deben equilibrar la estructura lingüística con la interpretación cultural y su propia identidad.

El Verbario (Verbarium) por tanto, invita a pensar a la gramática como un campo de fuerzas vivas, y a usar la creatividad para plasmar una composición usando no sólo grafemas en la producción de poemas verbales, sino los espacios e interlineados como fuerzas de tensión u atenuación en el desarrollo y desenlace del poema.

Ahora bien, estoy claro en que aún no conviene romantizar esta propuesta. Probablemente muchos piensen que un grupo de verbos no puede ser más que un experimento. Pero esa objeción no invalida esta propuesta; la vuelve más exigente. Por tanto el Verbario (Verbarium) se justifica por se al diferenciarse de un simple grupo de verbos, o un extracto, cuando la secuencia verbal de todo un poema produce tensión, cuando la economía gramatical no degenera en pobreza, sino que el poema se enriquece al lograr sostener una experiencia sin entregarse a excesos descriptivos, y al hiperrealismo que pueden agotar y restringir al lector (o escritor) que cada vez con mayor urgencia, exigen libertad interpretativa y la hallan en la sencillez.

En conclusión, el Verbario (Verbarium) se introduce como una propuesta de formato dentro del sistema lírico verbal, en una tentativa de organizar el poema desde el predominio del verbo, con reglas identificables, con una respiración propia y con una vocación estética. Si la propuesta tiene algún valor, no será por extravagante, sino por devolverle al verbo una soberanía que muchas veces se diluye bajo la fatuidad del exceso nominal o el ornamento vacuo. Asimismo, es importante recordar, que dentro del alcance de esta revisión, hasta ahora no aparece codificado algún formato que use exclusivamente la elipsis nominal como sistema de producción consolidado en forma idéntica al Verbario (Verbarium), por ello existe un espacio legítimo para formularlo, probarlo, discutirlo y someterlo al juicio de los lectores, investigadores y especialistas. Dicho de otro

⁴ En este contexto didáctico, la escritura poética permite trabajar forma, experiencia y reflexión lingüística al mismo tiempo; de ahí su utilidad para cursos universitarios de lengua y literatura.

modo, este texto no pretende imponer nada, sino abrir un laboratorio experimental; un espacio para la creatividad, pero sobre todo para el debate de nuevas formas de producción dentro del género lírico.

Bibliografía

- Academy of American Poets. n.d. "Verbless Poetry." Consultado el 26 de Marzo de 2026.
- Belknap, Robert E. 2004. The List: The Uses and Pleasures of Cataloguing. New Haven: Yale University Press.
- Bohn, Willard. 2001. Modern Visual Poetry. Newark: University of Delaware Press.
- Hanauer, David I. 2012. "Meaningful Literacy: Writing Poetry in the Language Classroom." Language Teaching 45 (1): 105–115.
- Leal, Orpheu Luz. 2014. "Poema Verbal Atualizado: Como Fazer." Recanto das Letras. Consultado el 26 de marzo de 2026.
- Melin, Charlotte. 2010. "Between the Lines: When Culture, Language and Poetry Meet in the Classroom." Language Teaching 43 (3): 349–365.
- Oulipo. n.d. "Historique de l'Oulipo." Consultado el 26 de marzo de 2026.
- Renau, Irene, Rogelio Nazar, Ana Castro, Benjamín López y Javier Obreque. 2019. "Verbo y contexto de uso: un análisis basado en corpus con métodos cualitativos y cuantitativos." Revista Signos. Estudios de Lingüística 52 (101).
- Soong, Jennifer. 2020. "The 'To-Do' List Poem: Prospective Memory and a New York School Genre." Journal of Modern Literature 43 (4): 91–107.

Simon Norlin,
engelskstuderende fra redaktionen anbefaler sine
egne ti yndlingsfilm

1. Happy Feet
2. The Perks of Being a Wallflower
3. Penelope
4. Flipped
5. Nick and Nora's Infinite Playlist
6. Grease
7. Greatest Days
8. Sing
9. Hotel Transylvania
10. 13 Going 30

L'enfant de l'hiver

J'étais l'enfant de l'hiver
Je faisais de la luge toute la journée
Mon rire chantant

L'angoisse me paralyse
Je suis muette au milieu d'un chœur
Depuis quand j'ai accepté la médiocrité ?

Éclairée par la lumière blanche de l'ordinateur
En regardant la neige tomber au dehors
Un sentiment de nostalgie
Pour la vie d'un enfant de l'hiver

par une étudiante en français

Honour Forgotten

by Simon Norlin, student of English

A mother with her two pre-teens, is standing outside the church, watching as a tombstone is being raised in the shadow of a privet. A man dead too soon. Her lip is still busted, and her black eye is slowly healing. Yet there are tears down her chin as she reminds them that their dad was a good man. Life had become too difficult. His head too haunted. There was not enough help. He could not live with what he had done. He feared it could happen again, or that he could hurt his children.

For years the tombstone stands alone in this small graveyard on the family plot. It reads beloved husband and father, but only the woman visits. Her wounds have healed. She comes by almost every day to light the candles on the grave. The first couple of years she could convince their children to join her on the weekends, but as they grew, so did their unwillingness. They barely knew him when he was alive; he was always away from home, and all they remember is the pain he caused their mom that one day before he died. She still cries every time she comes by and asks him why he did it.

After fifty years, the lonely tombstone is no longer alone. Beside it, another has been raised, reading beloved mother, a true saint. However, now the half-burned candles on the grave will no longer get lit, and nature is slowly taking over. Every month new flowers are placed on the adjacent grave as the grown-up children come by to tell their mom that they miss her. They never look at his tombstone except with apathy.

The creeping vines from the hedge are consuming the neglected tombstone, as one by one, four more join the row. The children and their spouses are all buried next to the mother, but not the father. The new visitors come by whenever they can, though life has taken them further away. They bring flowers and candles to decorate the graves and are paying the caretaker to clean them. Except for his. His they do not know.

"I am sorry, General" the caretaker says as he pulls the vines of the weather-worn and broken tombstone. He is there to remove the grave and free the plot. His remains are being cremated, and another is placed in his spot. Now there is nothing left to remember him by, no one to tell his story. In the history books he is mentioned as an unnamed soldier, a forgotten hero. Now he is only a statistical number. Still, he does not regret what he did. He served his country. He protected his family.

A birch tree peeked through the white four-pane window, and two women with odd smiles found themselves talking in the shared office tea kitchen—

“I’d love to show her around Copenhagen,” Sandy said with a brisk and toothy grin to the elderly secretary lady, whose coffee-stained lips smiled back as she pulled out her iPhone 12 with a fake-leather cover—the one with a magnet on the tip of one flap to latch on.

“But really? If you have time, that I don’t bother in some w—”

“Everything’s perfect. I’ll be there by then, and all she would have to do is to just reach out.” Sandy said with the widest of expressions, the one you give to older people as an incantation against bad omens. You wouldn’t want to upset the elderly, would you?

“Oh, that’s perfect. She loves going to new places, and it would be wonderful for you to practice your language.” the secretary said, with her phone saluting in her wrinkly palms.

This haggardly old has-been with neck folds like a turkey, a silver broach tied with thick black strings and dyed black hair, to hide her greying and her dress. God, her dress was something from a grandmother’s casket funeral; black and scarily plain, deflecting any trace of what “senior sweetness” is supposed to be, and she looked so clever when she commented on my dialect, like she’s the gated guardian of the entire language, but so what if I do have a slightly weird way of saying things? I’m thinking in at least three different languages, and it’s not like I can just shut one of them off; each one carries a part of me that I want to express, but there is literally no-one—repeat, NO-ONE—who understands what all these fucking quips mean and how to phrase them exactly right. But I refuse to censor myself. I’d rather kill myself than to listen to her patronize me one. more. time.

“It’s always nice to practice.” Sandy said through the gums of her bright pearly teeth. “If you type in ‘Sandy E. Woods’, I should pop up.”

The secretary stuffed her nose into the screen, beaming as a sterile hospital light, to type in those blocky, zoomed-in letters. One finger poke at a time, the room stood totally still while this extremely technical maneuvering was unfolding. The drip-coffee machine whirled on the office kitchen counter below the yellow wall clock ticking away.

"Ah, that's me." Sandy said with a surveying gaze. The same microscopic profile picture for the past seven years. There's that smile.

It seemed the secretary lady had forgotten something in the moment, like having to think if her oven had been left on, or if she truly did remember to lock the front door of her two-floor house, with gable roofing and a tiny attic stored with insulation and cobwebs. Those lowly cobwebs drooped, and there was nothing there to catch during the cold winter months, and the local town burglar was not interested in her muted ramshackle house. The solitary cat-collector cooped up there, leaving the TV running in the background of her afternoon naps, so she figured also that burglary was sort of too... sad. But the point is, Sandy couldn't sit there and wait for her to catch up from the cooking show inside her mind pie. A smile returned slowly on Sandy's lips.

"Here, you just click on my name and press 'Add friend' here, and I'll add you back." Sandy said with a puff in her rosy cheeks.

The secretary came about, and her face soured in slow-motion.

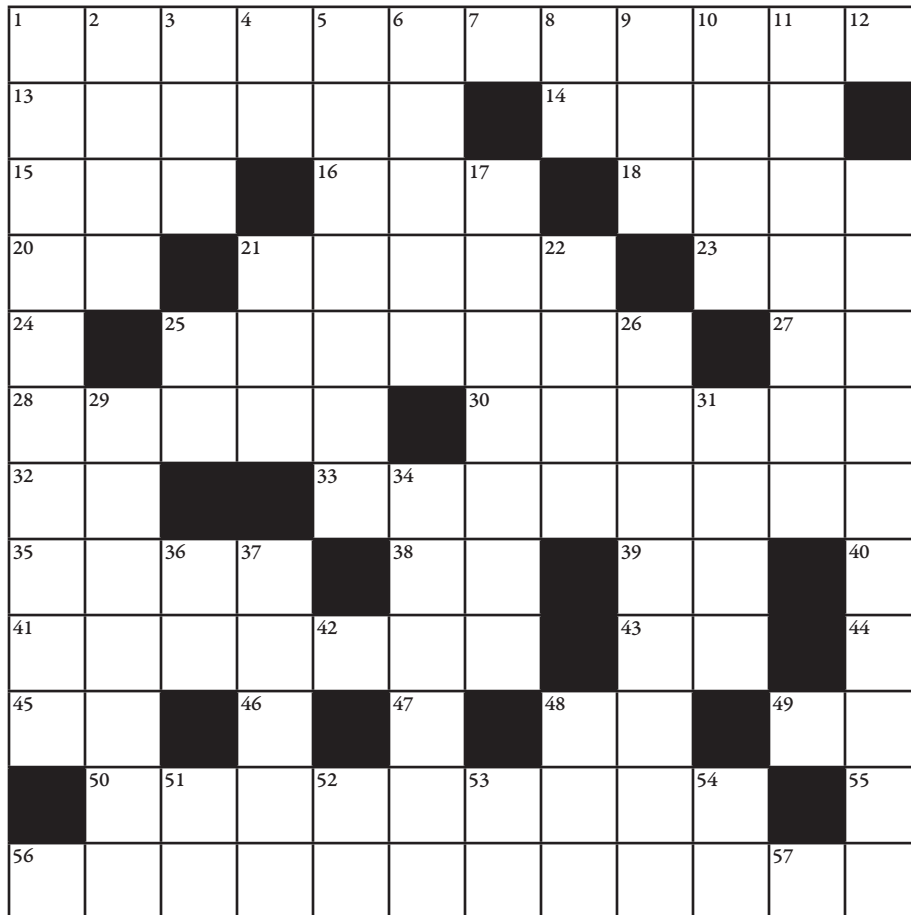

"I know how to add people on Facebook."

Sandy's eyebrows slumped, and her pearly white teeth holstered. She casually turned around and picked up the drip-coffee carafe and turned it upside down over her head as the hot liquid ran down her neck and seeped through her baby blue top. The steam rose from her burning skin as piles of wet rocks from a sauna; the horror of the secretary's face was indescribably sewn cross and disfigured from the unfolding scene, but before a scream could belt out, Sandy whopped her over the head with the carafe, shattering it into hundreds of little tiny pieces across the veneer dining table, the shitty plastic seats, the red and rugged Soviet-era carpet. The secretary fell, sadly, not thinking any longer about the casserole recipe from the TV screen. Sandy couldn't really think either; the pain from her blotching skin blocking that part out. But one thought did calmly arrive:

Bitch.

engeroms krydsord

af Daniel HH, engelskstuderende

følg med på @studieblad.engerom for facit

Vandret

- 1) Påskeaktivitet
- 13) Verdens 3. største ø
- 14) Alt for at vinde, intet at ____
- 15) Borgerlige ungdomsparti, fork.
- 16) Spansk hav
- 18) Kan f.eks. forekomme før power eller cover
- 20) Aconto udgift
- 21) Åbnede op
- 23) Gør det selv, fork.
- 24) Slangeformet bogstav
- 25) Engeroms tidsskrift
- 27) Nazikorps
- 28) Wilde eller Isaac
- 30) Gudsforbryder
- 32) Rollespil, fork.
- 33) Uden for det almindelige
- 35) Uanstændig opførsel
- 38) Thor eller Odin
- 39) Efter BA
- 40) Land i vand
- 41) Første tredjedel af Engerom
- 43) Før PM
- 44) Tyngeacceleration
- 45) Midlertidig sy
- 46) Omvendt S
- 47) I
- 48) ATM
- 49) Midterste hverdag, fork.
- 50) Selvisk
- 55) Online præfiks
- 56) Ringer når de skal varsles

Lodret

- 1) Cosmic crisp og Gråsten rød
- 2) Glædeligt udråb på et engelsk fodboldstadion
- 3) Minion manager
- 4) Enkelt
- 5) Reje fundet i bl.a. sushi
- 6) Forfatter Dahl
- 7) Omgivet af
- 8) Løjtnant, fork.
- 9) Kan bæres i bitterhed
- 10) Ligesom forrige kilde
- 11) Portias hofdame i Merchant of Venice
- 12) 1000
- 17) Sidste tredjedel af Engerom
- 19) En der kompulsivt vildleder
- 21) Solgryn producent
- 22) F.eks. 1/2 eller 30/7
- 25) Scandium
- 26) Anden tredjedel af Engerom
- 29) Mindre jagthund
- 31) Islamisk leder
- 34) Modsat sur
- 36) Vægtenhed, fork.
- 37) Dybere end alt
- 42) 50
- 48) ____ de Janeiro
- 49) Guddommelig tale
- 51) Gallium
- 52) Nægtende præfiks til f.eks. materiel eller potent
- 53) ____;DR, svar til lange beskeder
- 54) To ens
- 56) ____ pella, instrumentfri sang
- 57) Ca. 2,7

THE HISTORY OF ANGLISTIK AT KØBENHAVNS UNIVERSITET

by Sean Källberg, student of English

THE HISTORY OF OUR DISCIPLINE is not that old. A little over 300 years ago we trace our beginnings with a gradually increasing interest in modern languages. In the late 1700s English was taught in Denmark only sparingly, and privately.¹ At the time, the scholarly languages were Greek and Latin, learned by every school-boy at latinskolerne. That was the way to the University, where one (male only) primarily became a priest, doctor, or lawyer. These classical languages were considered, in the Danish terms, “åndelige.” The literature of the tongues was the kind that enriched the soul and sharpened the mind: “dannede” the person. But with the onset of increased international trade came a demand for learning modern languages, less for learning than for commercial purposes, and for this realskoler were established. Their educational focus was primarily on natural sciences and modern languages for practical and mercantile concerns, and their students were not aiming for a university degree or a career in the professions. Even then, few realskoler prioritized English, focusing on German and French instead. Just a few years later, the extent of English instruction was to be encouraged “wherever and whenever possible.”² If English was to be taught at realskoler some institution would have to be responsible for providing the realskoler with qualified teachers, and so in 1800 the University of Copenhagen established Det pædagogiske Seminarium.

Here we find Thomas Christopher Bruun, lecturer in French and English, who so distinguished himself at the Seminarium that the University accorded him the title of professor two years later. Thus, in 1802, Bruun became the first professor of English in Denmark, under the title “professor extraordinarius”, an honorary title indicating that this was a personal post, not one established in perpetuity.³ Yet Bruun was also in our sense extraordinary. For although he was apparently a terrible playwright, he was nevertheless an excellent teacher, an amusing poet, a prolific translator, a government secretary, and a well-known intellectual and commentator. He produced one book on English grammar and another on French,

1 Jens Rahbeck Sørensen, Modernitet eller åndsdannelse? engelsk i skole og samfund 1800-1935, Studier fra sprog- og oldtidsforskning 339 (Museum Tusculanum Københavns Universitet, 2003), 53.

2 Svend Ellehøj and Povl Johannes Jensen, Københavns universitet 1479-1979, with Københavns universitet (G.E.C. Gad, 1979), 267.

3 Ellehøj and Jensen, Københavns universitet 1479-1979, 269. Nielsen, the author and previous lecturer here at Engerom, surmises that the promotion was intended to secure Bruun a better salary.

and one on English pronunciation.⁴ Bruun continued teaching English, even after the bombardment of Copenhagen by the Royal Navy in 1807. Living in Copenhagen, he was of course present for this once-in-a-lifetime event and made himself most useful by acting as an interpreter during peace talks.⁵ Bruun taught mainly English reading, writing, pronunciation, and some literature (Shakespeare, Milton, Pope, Byron). In 1834, Bruun died, and with him Denmark lost its only qualified professor of English. The University of Copenhagen remained without any teacher of English for the following seventeen years. Often repeated is the story that "...in 1845 when the Icelander Grimur Thomsen defended his thesis Om Lord Byron [...] for the degree of 'magister', the critics were the professor of French and a professor of philosophy."⁶

GEORGE STEPHENS

In 1851 a lectureship in English was properly established with the appointment of George Stephens, a 38-year-old Liverpoolian Cambridge graduate. Working previously in Uppsala and Stockholm, he brought with him a considerable expertise in runes and Old English, and subsequently produced a remarkable number of scholarly publications.⁷ These works led him "to be regarded as the first Runic scholar in Europe."⁸ At this time, Old English was studied only as a branch of the Germanic languages, a philological curiosity connecting English to Danish. Our epic Beowulf, published in Copenhagen thirty-five years before, had begun to draw the attention that it has held ever since. Stephens was thus academically justified in his more scholarly approach to English, an approach then mostly restricted to the Classical and other ancient languages:

We of the West now eagerly study our own antiquities, our own language, our own national remains of every kind. An exclusive worship of Greek and Latin is now no longer tolerated. We now know that our forefathers were as "civilized" as the classical peoples, though not exactly in the same way; and even those who do not go so far, admit that they were better men, less demoralized, less vicious, more hardy, more chivalric, worthy of succeeding them, as they did, as kings of the world.⁹

⁴ Ellehøj and Jensen, Københavns universitet 1479-1979, 269–270.

⁵ Kabell, "Thomas Christopher Bruun, 1750-1834. The First Professor of English in Denmark," 25–26.

⁶ J. E. Nielsen, "The History of English Studies in Denmark," in European English Studies: Contributions towards the History of a Discipline (The European Society for the Study of English., 2000), 124. Grimur had also been the first editor of Beowulf in 1815.

⁷ Ellehøj and Jensen, Københavns universitet 1479-1979, 272–273.

⁸ Charles Lock, Notes Compiled for Address at George Stephens Symposium in 2013, 3 (unpublished).

⁹ Lock, Notes Compiled for Address at GS Symposium in 2013., 2013, 1.

Four years later Stephens was appointed “Lector i engelsk Sprog og Litteratur” with the extraordinary title of professor.¹⁰ In his years as “Professor of English at Cheapinghaven”, Stephens worked on Old English and Old Norse runes, traveling to, transcribing, and analyzing the runestones in Britain, Sweden, and Denmark. His magnum opus, “The Old-Northern Runic Moments of Scandinavia and England” in four volumes, extends over 1500 pages. A cursory search for some of his other works yields “The Runic Hall in the Danish Old-Northern Museum” from 1868. Much to my pleasure, the very first stone discussed in this book is from “Vordingborg, Sealand”, my hometown.¹¹ During this digression it became clear to me that the names of these dead persons and the history of our discipline, of our university, of our country is interlinked in such a way that “literally” (metonymically) touches home. For example: Although the aforementioned thesis Om Lord Byron was examined by two non-English professors of whom I had not heard, the thesis was, in a letter, recommended for acceptance by Adam Oehlenschläger, whom we have all read in gymnasiet.¹² Even if you do not recognize his name, you do recall his words: Der er et yndigt land. Our national poet lectured on Shakespeare also, but as Nielsen writes, he “probably relied on Danish and German translations.” Another familiar name, Georg Brandes, lectured in 1874–1875 on English romanticism and published in 1895–1896 “Shakespeare”, an enormous three volume treatise on the world’s favorite playwright.¹³ Bruun had approached the English tongue pedagogically, and his teaching was limited to instructing students in a foreign language, while he also undertook some translations. But with the recognition of the significance of Beowulf, the study of English could be taken seriously: it was a language with an ancient history and a literature as old as the Norse sagas which we still study and which we still pride on ourselves to this day.¹⁴ Stephen’s work on Old English, runes, and Beowulf contributed greatly to the foundation of English studies in Denmark and beyond. In 1893 Stephens resigned due to failing health, and two years later he passed away. A commemorative symposium was held at Engerom 200 years after his birth, at the instigation of Charles Lock (Professor of English

¹⁰ Ellehøj and Jensen, Københavns universitet 1479-1979, 273. Whether Stephens was a lektor or a professor is unclear. The primary sources included in this reference states he was hired as lektor (as a temporary post) in 1851 then given the title of professor in 1855 when he was hired as lektor permanently, but that this title was “titulær” (that is, in name only). An obituarist from 1895 contradicts this, remembering him as professor but also misremembering his initial date of hiring (“1853”).

¹¹ George Stephens, The Runic Hall in the Danish Old-Northern Museum (Michaelsen and Tillge, 1868, n.d.), 1, <https://ia601301.us.archive.org/28/items/cu31924026425391/cu31924026425391.pdf>.

¹² Nielsen, “The History of English Studies in Denmark,” 124.

¹³ Ellehøj and Jensen, Københavns universitet 1479-1979, 274.

¹⁴ If one wishes to study runes at KU today, NORS sometimes offers an elective on Viking-age and medieval runes.

Literature 1996–2026). There Stephens' works were discussed, and the University of Copenhagen paid tribute to his achievements in establishing and legitimizing the study of English as an academic discipline.

OTTO JESPERSEN

Following the retirement of Stephens, a successor was sought and the post was advertised as a full professorship (ordinarius), meaning that the University would always provide funding for such a position. Here appears another familiar name, renowned throughout the English-speaking world as one of the greatest figures in the history of English studies. On the 1st of May 1893, Otto Jespersen was appointed as Professor of English Language and Literature. Of the four candidates, he was selected on the grounds that he "... spoke English perfectly, was fully conversant with modern philology and was also familiar with English literature."¹⁵ Though aged only thirty-two, Jespersen was well prepared for this. As a student at the University he had taken a major in French with a minor in English and Latin (the latter obligatory for all masters students), graduating in 1887.¹⁶ Some years later while abroad, his mentor Vilhelm Thomsen sent him a letter urging him to focus his studies on English to qualify himself for the inevitably soon-to-be-established professorship of English. Perhaps he could write a thesis on something English, suggested Thomsen, who was himself not in English studies but a most distinguished philologist over a huge range of languages. Jespersen thus earned the degree of Dr.Phil. for a thesis on the grammatical cases of English.¹⁷ Far more than a worthy successor to Stephens, Jespersen remains one of the most celebrated names in the global history of English studies. We should be proud to include Jespersen in our academic lineage. He is also the only professor of English at this university to have served as Rector magnificus, for one year (1920–1921). In 1894, a year after Jespersen's appointment, Adolf Hansen was hired as docent. From this point on, docenter were hired and rehired as needed. It was not until 1919 that then-docent Niels Bøgholm was promoted to professor, meaning that English now consisted of two professors, one docent (Jes Hansen Skovgaard), and a rapidly increasing number of students:

Antallet af Studerende er i de senere Aar vokset uforholdsmæssig stærkt for de nyere Sprogs Vedkommende, især efter at den nye Ordning af Studentereksamen er traadt i Kraft [...] Det turde være indlysende, at en tidssvarende Undervisning, omfattende baade den nyere

¹⁵ Arne Juul and Hans Frede Nielsen, eds., Otto Jespersen: Facets of His Life and Work, Amsterdam Studies in the Theory and History of Linguistic Science. Series III, Studies in the History of the Language Sciences, v. 52 (J. Benjamins, 2010), 17–18.

¹⁶ Ellehøj and Jensen, Københavns universitet 1479-1979, 176.

¹⁷ Ellehøj and Jensen, Københavns universitet 1479-1979, 276.

praktiske Side (Sprogfærdighed) og den mere teoretiske, videnskabelige Side af Studiet umuligt kan gives paa tilfredsstillende Maade til 173 Studenter af een Professor og een Docent.¹⁸

POST-JESPERSEN

From this point on, English was an established discipline. Exam forms changed, the admissions exam was removed, we endured a German occupation, Studienævnet was occupied with pen-sum-planning. Since then, there have been some notable changes to our location, our faculty, and our studies in general.

Until 1970 we belonged to Det Filosofiske Fakultet, and from 1973 to Det Humanistiske Fakultet. In 1976, all teachers of English were rounded up from across the inner city and collected onto one address at Njalsgade 80. In 2004 we ceased to be known as Engelsk Institut when English was combined with other European languages (excluding the Slavic): French, German/Dutch, Italian/Romanian, Spanish/Portuguese.¹⁹ In 2019 an attempt by the administration of dismantling Engerom and retooling it into one general “Europæiske Sprog” program failed after protests and blockades. In 2020, all faculties were now to brand themselves with KU logo in red.²⁰

First and foremost: we have not always been amagerkanere. If you have also wondered why our buildings are so glassy and rectangular, it is because they are new. If you are wondering why our campus is known as “KUA” although it says Søndre Campus on the map posts, it because it is a new name. The modern blocks were finished in 2017. From 1976 all departments within the Faculty of Humanities were housed in “temporary” buildings, and there they remained for forty years. Before 1976, Engelsk Institut was housed in various buildings around the inner city. “Københavns Universitets Årsbog” from 1987 records a move in 1970 to Højbro Plads 7, right on the corner of Strøget. In 1972 and 1974 it acquired space in Lille Kirkestræde 1 (at the corner of Sankt Nikolaj Kirke) and Købmagergade 52 (across the old University library, right next to modern Studenterhuset).²¹ Although scattered across town, we

18 H. Munch-Petersen, Aarbog for Københavns Universitet, Kommunitet Og Den Polytekniske Lærestalt, Københavns Universitet, 1920, 197–198, <https://tidsskrift.dk/kuaarbob/article/view/84323/121660>.

19 Fink-Jensen, Jens, et. al, Københavns Universitets Årbog 2004 (Københavns Universitet, 2004), 491, https://universitetshistorie.ku.dk/filer/aarbob/aarbob_2004.pdf.

20 Anders Fjeldberg, “Farvel Til Duen Og Slangen, Manden Og Lindormen – Nu Er Der Kun Et Logo På Københavns Universitet,” Uniavisen, December 27, 2019, <https://uniavisen.dk/farvel-til-duen-og-slangen-manden-og-lindormen-nu-er-der-kun-et-logo-paa-koebenhavns-universitet/>. If you are wondering why you may sometimes, in an old article or on a professor’s slideshow, see a blue KU logo, it is because each faculty once had their own. Ours was blue with an open book: a Hebrew aleph character on the left page, a lyre on the right, the book on top of a da Vincian human.

21 Yum Kvarts and Ejvind Slottved, Københavns Universitets Årbog 1986

could not then complain of soulless architecture. Second, regarding Engerom—per editor of this article, Charles Lock—the collaboration across languages and their students has been rather slow to develop. After twenty-two years this Engeromic journal is a new thing, and a most welcome one. Yet stud.mag is not the first journal here: the English students published INK from 2010 to 2012, comprised mainly of creative writing and illustrations. Furthermore, there was a sense of territorial vigilance: even some hostility between students of different languages was evident twenty years ago, and there was a particular resistance to the idea that there should not be one bar per language but a single Engeromic bar, where—heaven forfend!—students of English might meet students of other languages. Third, our studies are now more geared towards general humanistic skills, prioritizing the competences (supposedly) demanded by the job market. There has been, since the eighties at least, a heavier focus on theoretical approaches that draw in technical terms from other fields. In turn, there has been a severe reduction of the philological studies once comprised by Anglistik. As a direct or indirect consequence, philology—what our discipline founded itself on—has completely gone from the current study program. We are no longer taught to read Beowulf, our foundational text, in the Old English in which it survives. When did this happen? According to Nielsen’s article—on which we have to rely for there is so little information on this—Old English was still a requirement per the 1960s exam reform, and Old & Middle English were still offered as electives at the time of his writing (2000).²² It must, then, have been at the changing of the old guard. Our estrangement from the linguistic history of English (including its Danish connection—it is a Germanic language after all!) seems to have come about with the lack of concern regarding our own history. This may also have contributed to the marginalizing of textual criticism and close reading, of aesthetic appreciation and philological investigation, in favor of more abstract and interdisciplinary modes of reading. The consequences of this for the discipline of “English studies” are still to be realized.

(Københavns Universitet, 1986), 60, <https://tidsskrift.dk/kuaarbog/article/view/85743/124500>.

22 Nielsen, “The History of English Studies in Denmark,” 135–136. I would like to see a kursuskatalog but they are not easy to find. Charles Lock has not heard of anyone formally studying Old English since he arrived in 1996, though in 2022 it was offered in an informal seminar by Kirsten Ogilby, a Ph.D. student, and proved surprisingly popular.

Acknowledgment: Many thanks to Charles Lock for his help, both editorial and archival.

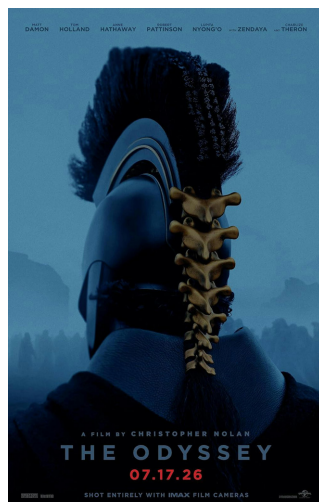

What makes a poem?

A poem has words, the same as conversation
More frequent use of 'esoteric' and 'cerebral' so maybe not the same words but the letters at least
Are these not the same letters that my mother's hands taught to me?
I remember being distracted by the gold of her wedding ring, by the time my youngest sister was learning there was only a faint line left on her finger, but that makes not a poem ?
Well how can I make a poem but not you, i could use
Enjambent, look how i put this degree to use
But i've been outdone by lovers' laugh rhymes more than written verse
And falls softer on my ears than rolling wheels of the curtain drawn hearse
My grandfather spells his name with a k not a c, so i practiced k seven times more than c
does the difference matter any more, between poems and letters learnt
What makes this more a poem than my grandfather forgetting if it is 'c' or 'k' in his name?
I've been outdone and undone, by poetry or words or letters
- February 2026

Ana Bratkova,
italienskstuderende fra

redaktionen anbefaler

følgende
sprintnye bog og film

The Odyssey (Odysseen)

Christopher Nolans nyeste film fra 2026 forvandler den urgamle myte om Odysseus til en livlig fortælling. Filmen er udelukkende optaget med IMAX-kameraer.

L'architectrice (Arkitektinden)

En historisk roman om den romerkse arkitektinde Plautilla Bricci. Den er skrevet af den italienske forfatter Melania G. Mazzucco (2019; oversat til dansk af Marie Andersen i 2025).

At generere eller ikke at generere, dét er spørgsmålet

stud.mag rapporterer

En rapport fra dialogmødet om AI arrangeret af Engeroms Fagråd, 6. maj 2026

TIL ENGEROM FAGRÅDS DIALOGMØDE om kunstig intelligens var lokalet vel mødt af menneskelig intelligens der diskuterede deres nu kunstige modpart. Panelet bestod af tre studerende, tre undervisere (en af dem viceinstituteder for forskning), en ordstyrer og viceinstituteder for uddannelse og studieleder Christian Jensen. Viceinstituteder for uddannelse og studieleder Christian Jensen åbnede således mødet med at oplæse en rammesætning han havde lavet for et halvt år siden men 'ikke kunne udelukke Copilot havde været inde over'. Dernæst kom alle seks panelister med åbningsbemærkelser. Udover de sædvanlige talepunkter om, at man skal huske at være kritisk overfor AI, var der også dybe og bekymret overvejelser. En studerende fortalte, at en dag dukkede Copilot logoet op i hendes Word-dokument, som hun nu forstod betød, at Copilot nu har skrabt dokumentet for data og derfor havde alle informationerne på de interviewdeltagere hvis personlige oplysninger hun endnu ikke havde anonymiseret. En anden studerende perspektiverede AI-situationen til Hannah Arendts sondring mellem anstrengelse og nydelse: 'Hvad er AI? En eller anden måde at slippe for det hårde arbejde' – og der så også i det ligger en menneskelig pris. Den sidste studerende undrede sig meget over, om han burde bruge AI i sin opgave, men besluttede sig til sidst for, at han 'ikke ville gå på kompromis', og som han senere fortalte, at han i bund og grund ønskede en bedre opgave. Derfor brugte han AI. Underviserne budte også ind med bemærkninger. En professor i tysk erklærede over Zoom på projektoren: 'Det er mig. Hvis jeg lige pludselig virker til at være stor fortaler af KI, så er det deepfake.' Han tøvede ikke med kritik og åbnede debatten op på international plan: 'KI er her for at blive – det er en del af den store mekanisering der tilhører kapitalismens logik.' Han spørger desuden også, hvorfor gå på universitet for at træne sin hjerne, når man alligevel bare udliciterer arbejdet til en maskine? Det er som at betale et fitnessabonnement og sidde i baren med en proteinshake. Og endelig, spørger professoren 'skal vi virkelig arbejde for at gøre Elon Musk endnu rigere?' De to andre undervisere, begge fra engelsk, fortalte om hvordan de hver især brugte AI i deres felt. Den ene har studeret maskinoversættelse siden 1997 og inddrager AI i undervisning og forskning om oversættelse, den anden bruger det til distant reading i 'digital humanities'. Han tilføjer også, at AI er på pensum fordi arbejdsmarkedet forlanger det. Og så åbner talerlisten.

Ordstyreren spørger åbent, om man kan bruge noget kritisk, hvis man ikke har brugt det før. Engelskunderviseren skelner mellem at prompte på en giv-mig-et-svar-måden og 'jeg kommer med noget, hvad synes du'-måden. Tyskprofessoren tordner igen fra Zoomopkaldet: 'KI er her, vi skal forholde os til det...' Men er det sandt? spørger han. Professoren perspektiverer til nanoteknologi – det hører man ikke om længere, det samme med atomkraft. 'Vi har et valg. Et politisk valg og et videnskabeligt valg.' Dernæst henviser han til en undersøgelse i USA, hvor der nu er efterspørgsel efter 'human-centered skills': 'Vi skal fokusere på det i vores studie KI ikke kan endnu, hvis vi skal fokusere på jobmarkedet.' Det er blandt andet at gå i arkiver og dybdelæsning, forklarer han.

Nu taler nogle fra publikum. En relaterer hvordan hun bruger det kritisk i sin undervisning. De to engelskundervisere er enige. Den ene supplerer med en undersøgelse af AI-brug i gymnasiet: 9/10 bruger det til deres opgave, 'det en ny generation der kommer på uni.' En tyskstuderende fundrer, 'hvem er det vi sparer med hvis vi spørger en AI?' Men det er først ved sytten spørgsmål der er rejst reelle bekymringer fra dem, som faktisk læser her. En engelskstuderende på 2. semester oplever, at undervisningen er blevet overtaget af AI. 'Vi lærer ikke engelsk. Vi lærer at spørge AI', fortæller den studerende. Viceinstitutleder for uddannelse og studieleder Christian Jensen kalder det en 'mavepuster' at høre, men runder sit længere svar (a.la man skal huske at bruge AI kritisk) af med, at 'når man spørger AI spørger man sig selv.' Den engelskstuderende rækker hånden op igen og fortsætter: 'Hele grunden til at man læser sprog bliver skubbet ud.' Den studerende spørger, hvorfor vi skal lære så meget om AI når vi ikke er programmører? Nu spørger en ung mand foran 'hvad er værdien i en humanistisk uddannelse, dets status, hvis man bare kan spørge AI?' Man kunne næsten høre tyskprofessorens lettelse over Zoom:

Hvor er det livsbekræftende, at de studerende savner det klassiske indhold! Et akademi der belønner nulfejl belønner AI. Måske man skulle belønne det ude for boksen, dem der læser det udenfor pensum.

En anden engelskstuderende kritiserer også de nye tilvalgspakker, hvor størstedelen af dem handler om AI (og ingen af dem har noget at gøre med litteratur): 'Vi er supertrætte af, at valget bliver taget fra os. Mange af os er interesseret i ikke at bruge det.' Det er den ene engelskunderviser er ked af at høre det, og fortæller videre at AI bliver brugt i oversættelsesbranchen, og at hun tvinger ingen til at bruge det. En sidste studerende fra engelsk, kandidatniveau, savner refleksivitet. Hvorfor bruger man det, hvorfor bruger man det ikke? Og hvorfor bliver uddannelsen indrettet efter arbejdsmarkedet '... når arbejdsmarkedet sig selv har dannet sig vaner ukritisk' – hvor står vi så? spørger han. Det vækker en tanke hos en anden underviser foran, der således siger, at han stadig har svært ved at se hvorfor man på universitetet overhovedet bruger så meget tid på distant reading. Det er så professoren fra engelsk der svarer på to af de studerendes frustration. Han opfordrer til at være kritisk og erkender vi er her for litteraturen: 'Vi skriver jo ikke kode'. Han gentager dog beretningen om, at uddannelsen skal være rettet mod arbejdsmarkedet.

Mødets sidste ord går til Institutleder Lisbeth Verstraete-Hansen. 'AI er her og vi skal tage stilling til det.' Hun udtrykker bekymring for, at hvis KU ikke lærer deres studerende at bruge AI, så gi-der arbejdsgiverne ikke at bruge tid eller penge på et kursus til dem. I stedet vil de bare hyre nogen fra AAU. Hun opfordrer endeligt de studerende til at tage fat i fagrådet og studienævnet.

Med det lukker mødet og folk summer efter. Jeg, og fælles redaktør Mathias Frost, som tilfældigvis dukkede op, stod tilbage med forargelse. Der blev stillet mange gode spørgsmål, men der var mangel på direkte forslag til tiltag og handling. Der blev, udover en enkelt gang, ikke nævnt noget om de materielle konsekvenser der udgøres på bekostning af generativ kunstig intelligens; skaden de store datacentre volder på miljøet, lokalt og globalt; tanken om tankeudliciteringen gik igen, men ingen kommentar om intelligensens kilde, nemlig en total samtykkeløs datahøst af internettet; eller hvordan ens samtaler bliver brugt som træningsdata til at udvikle og forbedre de diverse AI-modeller – AI-modeller som eftersigende hjælper både ICE og Israel med mere effektiv målsøgning.

Udviklerne af kunstig intelligens startede måske med gode hensigter men nu er menneskets velvære kun et salgspunkt, ikke et mål. Igen – har vi virkelig lyst til at arbejde for at gøre verdens rigeste mand endnu rigere? Mathias og jeg forlod lokalet uden høje forhåbninger, og med indtrykket af, at de nuværende og fremtidige konsekvenser AI forvolder ikke bliver taget alvorligt af dem der sætter rammen (med Copilot) for hvordan teknologien integreres i vores uddannelse. Måske man skulle tænke uden for boksen på denne her?

— Sean Källberg, 23. juni 2026.

Lucía Sánchez Saornil

af Lars Troels Møller, engersk ph.d.-studerende og oversætter

Lucía Sánchez Saornil blev den 13. december 1895 født ind i en arbejderklassefamilie bosat i udkanten af Madrid – nærmere bestemt i kvarteret Las Peñuelas. Hendes forældre hed Gabriela Saornil Serrano og Eugenio Sánchez Rodríguez og stammede begge fra landsbyen Pozal de Gallinas nær Valladolid.

Sánchez Saornil publicerede i 1914 sit første digt i ugeavisen Avante fra Ciudad Rodrigo, hvilket blev startskuddet til en livslang digtergerning inden for spansk modernisme, ultraisme, politisk engageret poesi og den 'rodløse' poesi, som stod i kontrast til de oftest Franco-tro digteres 'rodfæstede' poesi, helt frem til hendes død i 1970. I perioden 1916-1930 udgav hun desuden ofte under sit mandlige pseudonym, Luciano de San-Saor, hvilket lettede adgangen til det mandsdominerede, litterære miljø foruden at give hende mulighed for at give sin lesbiske eros et poetisk udtryk. De følgende to oversatte digte er debutdigtet "Nieve" (Sne) fra 1914 og sonetten "Motivos triunfales. Rito, pecado..." (Triumfmotiver. Ritual, synd...) trykt i tidsskriftet Los Quijotes i 1917. Sánchez Saornils forfatterskab er endnu ukendt i Spanien uden for litteraturforskningsmiljøer og personkredse med interesse i 1930'ernes feminisme og er af samme grund heller aldrig før blevet oversat til dansk. Det forsøger dette bidrag at råde bod på – omend i det små.

Motivos triunfales. Rito, pecado...

Eras grave y augusta, eras casi hierática
y te amé en la escultura de tu cuerpo pagano, tu mirada dormida era quieta y extática
y era, un mármol desnudo, tu blancor soberano.

Un jardín luminoso; una fuente sonora;
desmayados los cuerpos en la luz violeta;
un perfume violento exhalaba la flora que abrasaba la carne en un ansia secreta.

En la hora encantada, del jardín principesco,
la armonía del verso devanaba en tu oído,
encendidos los ojos de un arder satanesco.

Tal que rito pagano, a la luz postrimera,
como a un dios, en el templo del jardín florecido,
me ofrendaste el exvoto de tu cuerpo de cera.

Triumfmotiver. Ritual, synd...

Du var højtidelig, æret, du var næsten hellig,
og jeg elskede skulpturen af din hedenske krop.
Dit sovende blik var ekstatisk, ubevægeligt
og din nøgne marmors mægtige hvidhed lyste op.

En lysende have med en klingende fontæne,
og de dånedes kroppe i det violette skær.
Blomsterne udsendte deres intense parfume,
så kødet blussede op af et hemmeligt begær.

I den fyrstelige haves fortryllede time
hørte du versets harmoni i dit øre kime og den sataniske ilds flammer brændte i dit blik.

Det var et hedensk ritual, mens solen sås dale.
Som til en gud i templet i den blomstrende have ofrede du din vokskrop – jeg i votivgave den fik.

LUCIANO DE SAN-SAOR, LOS QUIJOTES, NUMMER 64,
MADRID, DEN 25. OKTOBER 1917

NIEVE

En la tarde silenciosa
está dormida la nieve...
Hay una paz melancólica
en el día que se muere.

Todo es blanco; todo es puro
y hay un azul que florece
como un pálido reflejo
en la tarde que se pierde.

Todo es blanco, todo es blanco igual que almas de mujeres.
Todo tiene la blancura
de un idilio sonriente.

Está la llanura inmensa
toda cubierta de nieve,
y bajo su manto añoso
todas las praderas verdes.

¡Qué silencio!, ¡qué quietud!
Enmudecieron las fuentes...

...Nada hiera los oídos, ¡qué lenta la noche viene!

El paisaje está dormido,
los árboles no se mueven.
No hay risas ni melodías,
todo es dulce... todo duerme.

Hay una nube violeta
en la tarde que se muere,
un silencio melancólico
¡y unas huellas en la nieve!

SNE

I den stille eftermiddag ligger sneen tungt og blunder...
En melankolsk fred hviler bag
dagen, der langsomt går under.

Alt er helt rent, alt er helt hvidt
og en blålig farve står i flor.
En genspejling, der blegt og blidt med eftermiddagen henfór.

Alt er helt hvidt, alt er helt hvidt
ligesom kvindernes sjæle.
Alt har samme hvidheds skær
som kærlighedssmilets dvælen.

Sletten er umådeligt vid
og helt dækket til af sneen, og under dets gamle dække
hviler de grønneste enge.

Sikke en stilhed, sikken ro!
Springvandene er gjort tavse
...intet sårer noget øre
så langsomt mørket falder på!

Landskabet sover roligt
træerne rører sig ikke.
Ingen latter, ingen toner,
alt er mildt... alt er så stille.

Der svæver en violet sky
over dagen, som sygner hen.
Stilheden – melankolsk og bly
- og nogle fodspor i sneen!

LUCÍA SÁNCHEZ SAORNIL, AVANTE. SEMANA-RIO INDEPENDIENTE, CIUDAD RODRIGO DEN 31.
JANUAR 1914

Daniel HH, student of English

Date night

Open me up.
Knife from jugular notch to bladder.
I'll cling to you, but the flesh gives easily.
Have you washed your hands?

Find the stone and liberate me
From original sin and procreation.
Discard it thoroughly,
And regard me.

Dog Days

Shiver,
 Sun,
 and the ghost thereof.

I'm radiating the leftover heat.
We're not quite touching but I can feel you there.
Such an underrated distance;
Intimacy of the remains.

Step 3: Beatification (without evidence of martyrdom)

I am waiting on a word of revelation,
But you cannot seem to find it
amongst any pleasant sounds,
Please just stop talking, I'm not built for harmless observations.
If it's not earth-shatteringly blissful or revolting,
I'll throw it to the hounds.

There's a coward on the run in my eyes
Hiding in the anterior chamber.
I'm planning his demise
But he might be a founding member.

How much of myself can I kill and still die a saint?

I should've heeded warnings from friends,
But the flowers told me otherwise
- or I'd break off their stems.
I'll curse the grief I'm left with,
But please don't look for blame.
I won't look down at my hands
Yet the warmth drips all the same.

I've grown distant, petty and pretty,
I'm a shadow on display.
Always snarky, never witty,
Prometheus choking on the clay.

"HEAVIER THINGS"

Sean Källberg, student of English

PICK UP, THE WILD IS CALLING

He climbed mountains of great pallor, scratching his knees on the jagged edges,
resting on the coigns where flowers sprouted sparsely.

He traversed valleys of deep remembrance,
the depression in the landscape
collected the heavenly tears in which he swam,
great breaststrokes and butterfly crawl
to the beach where he lay,
gazing up at a sky of hopeful bliss feeling grateful for all that he saw and all that he experienced in this life
and never will in the next.

Yes he saw it all,
and it filled him with greatness,
greatness
greatness beyond comparison
to any other thing that might live or breathe, breathe
breathe
yet none of it was real
until they found him dead
and traced his steps
so that the people he met might know where he went.

AMERICAN TWILIGHT

Out west
where cowboys decompose
bloody vultures pick their bones dry.

A man
in a thick fur coat
sheds a tear for the herd once here.

O how they failed
to save the nation;
O how they failed
to impede conservation.

The eagles that are left need suspend their civility
and wrap themselves in the flag—

Watch as they rip apart the oligarchs!
Blood flies into the democratic sky,
blending into an American Twilight
as the stars dare come out.

I

A roman man cut forests
into maps of mazes,
inserting himself
into the calendar of caged women.

He is no king—
only if I am his queen.
He will kiss my ring—
only in my dream.

SONNET III

How did they do it, the masters of then?
Am I plainly not good enough, or is
It that I write simply with broken pen?
(Originality, the key to this)—
Did they lead extraordinary lives?
Did they not ask futile questions like “when”?
Did they break the hearts of their many wives?
Did they just scratch gold on paper to send?
Perhaps the muses died out long ago
Or they live still, laughing at my request
To some meager talent on me bestow,
So I may be content with just my best.
For 'tis folly to think I might smite gold.
A good poem! What a thing to behold.

Bars, "bitches" og bias: Generobring og reproduktion af sexistisk sprog i tysk rap

af Maria Mercedes M. Lindenskov, tyskstuderende

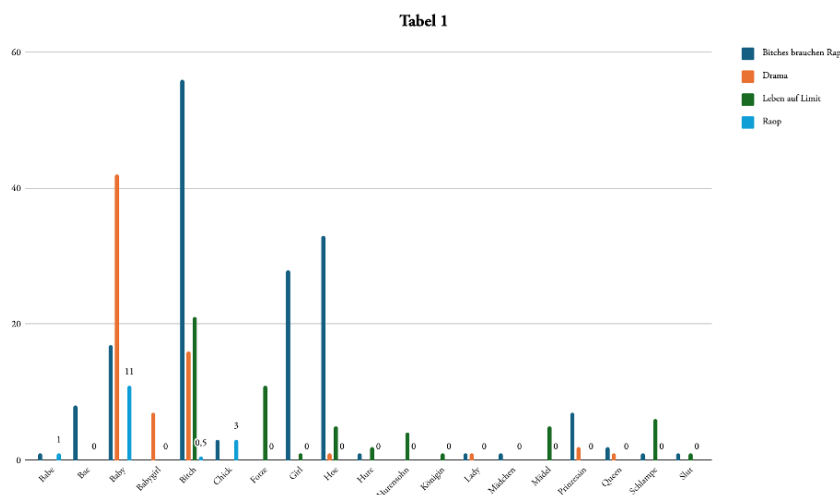

(Baseret på bachelorprojekt, 2023)

Det mest brugte ord om en kvinde i de fire tyske hiphop-album, jeg analyserede i mit bachelorprojekt var ikke Frau, Girl eller Mädchen. Det var bitch.

Ordet optrådte 94,5 gange i mit materiale. Det blev brugt næsten tre gange så ofte som Hoe og langt oftere end grovere tyske udtryk som Fotze og Schlampe. Det var så dominerende, at jeg endte med at kalde hele min delanalyse for Bitchanalyse.

Min konklusion i bachelorprojektet var, at "kvinde er kvinde værst", fordi de kvindelige rappere i min analyse brugte flest kvindefjendtlige udtryk. I dag står det klart, at den konklusion var alt for simpel. Jeg overså, at ordene ændrer betydning, når de bruges af kvinderne.

TABEL 1

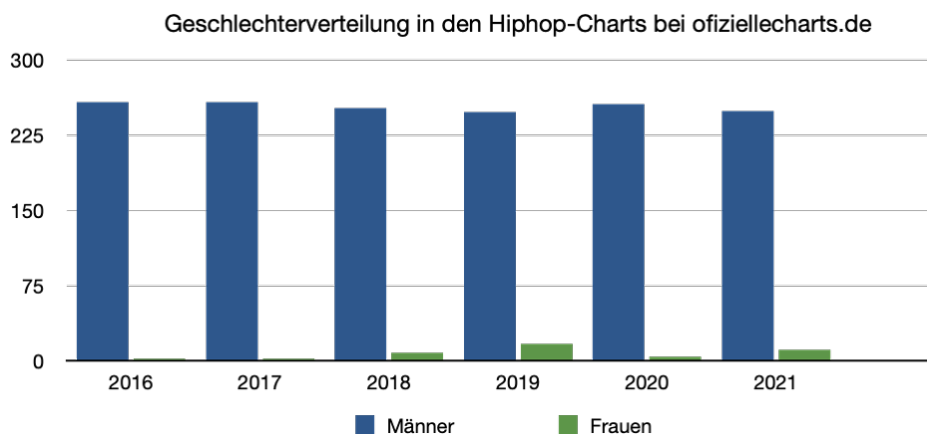

Fordeling af forskellige slangudtryk for "kvinde" i analyserede raptekster (Lindenskov 2023, 16).

Denne artikel undersøger, hvordan kvindelige rappere i tysk mainstream-hiphop anvender sexistisk sprog, med særligt fokus på ordet bitch. Med udgangspunkt i Judith Butlers begreb om den heteroseksuelle matrice, analyseres hvordan sproglig generobring både kan fungere som en strategi for at generobre magt og som en reproduktion af eksisterende magtstrukturer. Artiklen tager afsæt i et bachelorprojekt (2023), men præsenterer en ny kvalitativ analyse af SXTN og Shirin Davids brug af ordet bitch.

En mandsdomineret sprognorm

Fra 2016 til 2021 udgjorde kvinder mellem 0,77% og 6,42% af artisterne på den tyske mainstream hiphop-top 5 liste. Over 93% af artisterne på listen var mænd. Det betyder, at sprognormen i mainstream-rap i høj grad er defineret af mænd - og at kvinder, der vil ind i genren, skal navigere i en allerede etableret maskulin diskurs.

TABEL 2

Kønsfordeling på Offizielle Charts.de hiphoptopliste (Lindenskov 2023, 14).

Ifølge Gabriele Klein og Malte Friedrich (2003) er hiphop en patriarkalsk organiseret, mandsdomineret og sexistisk kulturpraksis, hvor kvindelighed primært fungerer som projektfelth for mandlige fantasier. Kvindelige rappere har derfor historisk haft begrænset mulighed for at definere sig selv uden for allerede eksisterende stereotyper (Klein og Friedrich 2003).

Den heteroseksuelle matrice

Judith Butler beskriver i Gender Trouble (2002) den heteroseksuelle matrice som et system, hvor biologisk køn, kønsidentitet og begær forventes at hænge sammen på bestemte måder. For at en mand skal passe ind i den heteroseksuelle matrice, skal han have mandlige kønsmarkører (køn), ligne en mand (kønsidentitet) og være tiltrukket af kvinder (seksualitet/begær), hvorimod en "rigtig" kvinde har kvindelige kønsmarkører, ligner en kvinde (langt hår, bruger make-up, osv.) og er tiltrukket af mænd. Ifølge Butler opfattes denne sammenhæng som "naturlig", men den er i virkeligheden socialt konstrueret og opretholdt gennem gentagne normer og praksisser. Personer, der ikke passer ind i matricen - f.eks. en queer person - bliver marginaliseret, fordi de udfordrer de dominerende forestillinger om køn og seksualitet.

Den heteroseksuelle matrice viser, hvordan nogle måder at være mand eller kvinde på og begære bliver gjort til normen, mens alt det, der falder udenfor, bliver usynliggjort eller opfattet som forkerte (Butler 2002).

Genobring gennem sprog

I denne artikel ser jeg nærmere på, hvordan SXTN og Shirin David bruger ordet bitch på deres album Leben am Limit (2017) og Bitches brauchen Rap (2021).

Shirin David: bitch som identitet

Hos Shirin David er bitch først og fremmest en selvbetegnelse. Titlen på albummet kan oversættes til "Bitches behøver rap". På nummeret Depressionen im Paradies rapper hun: "Fergie ist der Grund, warum ich mich eine „Bad Bitch“ nenn" (dansk: Fergie er grunden til at jeg kalder mig selv en bad bitch). Her er bitch ikke en fornærmelse, men en styrkende identitetskategori. I Babsi Bars og Ich darf das bruges ordet til at markere status og handlekraft: "Ich bin keine fame-Bitch / ich bin einfach Fame, Bitch!" (dansk: jeg er ikke en fame-bitch / jeg er bare fame, bitch! ← anden gang bliver bitch brugt som et udråb, for at understrege hendes pointe). "Ass out, Daisy Duck / Keiner sagt mir, was ich darf / Bad Bitch, gibt kein fuck / Baby ich bin interessant." (dansk: Ass out, Daisy Duck / Ingen fortæller mig, hvad jeg må / bad bitch, gi'r ikke en fuck / baby jeg er interessant). Ordet fungerer som en performativ markør for succes og kontrol. Denne resignifikation er ikke uden spændinger. I linjer som "Ugly Bitches machen pretty Bitches gerne klein / aber real bad Bitches lieben bad Bitches" (dansk: Ugly bitches kan godt lide at nedgøre pretty bitches / men ægte bad bitches elsker bad bitches) etablerer hun et hierarki mellem kvinder. Bitch bliver dermed både inkluderende og ekskluderende. Shirin David ekskluderer kvinder, som nedgør andre kvinder.

Shirin David skaber en ny definition af ordet bitch. Ifølge hende er en bitch en succesfuld, seksuelt selvsikker og økonomisk uafhængig kvinde. Hun bryder ikke med den heteroseksuelle matrice, men udvider dens rammer. Med undtagelse af nummeret Be a hoe / break a hoe hvor hun sammen med Kitty Kat rapper: "Sag dei'm Boy, dass du bi bist / lass mich dein Girl sein" (fortæl din fyr at du er bi(seksuel) / lad mig være din pige). Hun afviger altså fra at være en kvinde, der begærer mænd, i og med at hun begærer både mænd og kvinder.

SXTN: bitch som angreb og overdrivelse

SXTN bruger primært ordet bitch som et aggressivt udråb. I linjer som "Du bist am Arsch, Bitch!" (du er på røven, bitch!) og "Du bist out, Bitch, ich bin weiblich und missbrauch dich" (dansk: du er ude, bitch, jeg er kvinde og misbruger dig), bruges ordet som en direkte fornærmelse. Det afgørende er dog, at denne fornærmelse kommer fra en kvindelig taleposition. SXTN overtager et klassisk maskulint rapsprog og overdriver det. De forsøger ikke at mildne sproget, tværtimod, så sætter de det på spidsen. I mange tilfælde fungerer bitch næsten som et tomt slang eller en rytmisk markør: "Kauf dir ruhig unsern SXTN-Kalender, Bitch!" (dansk: køb bare vores SXTN-kalender, bitch!). Her er ordet løsrevet fra en konkret kvindefjendtlig reference og bliver en del af rapgenrens performative stil. Denne strategi kan forstås som det, Butler beskriver som resignifikation gennem gentagelse. Ved at gentage det nedsættende ord i en ny kontekst, forskydes betydningen af ordet. Den oprindelige vold, der følger med ordet, forsvinder dog ikke.

SXTN generobrer sproget gennem overidentifikation. De spiller rollen så ekstremt, at den fremstår konstrueret, og netop fordi de ikke ændrer ordets oprindelige betydning, reproducerer de også den logik, de udfordrer. Forskellen på SXTN og Shirin Davids strategi er, at Shirin David omdanner bitch til en identitetskategori med positive konnotationer, men skaber nye hierarkier, mens SXTN bevarer ordets aggressive betydning, men destabiliserer det gennem deres position og overdrivelse. Begge strategier kan forstås som former for generobring. Men de viser også, at generobring ikke nødvendigvis betyder frigørelse. Den foregår stadig inden for de strukturer, den forsøger at ændre.

Konklusion

Kvindelige rappere i tysk mainstream-hiphop bruger ord som bitch til at skabe plads, identitet og magt i en genre, hvor de statistisk set næsten ikke findes. Generobring er derfor både en strategi og et paradoks. Når kvinder bruger sproget mod sig selv og andre, forskyder de dets betydning, men reproducerer samtidig en diskurs, der er skabt af en mandsdomineret kultur.

Mit bachelorprojekt viste, at kvinder brugte flest kvindehjemtlige udtryk. Denne artikel viser, at spørgsmålet ikke kun er hvor ofte udtrykkene bruges, men også hvordan og af hvem.

Litteraturliste

- Butler, Judith. 2002. Gender Trouble. New York: Routledge.
- David, Shirin. 2021. Bitches brauchen Rap. Juicy Money Records. <https://music.apple.com/us/album/bitches-brauchen-rap/1592093868> (Originalværk udgivet 2021)
- Klein, Gabriel, og Malte Friedrich. 2003. Is this real - Die Kultur des HipHop. Frankfurt am Main: Suhrkamp Verlag.
- Lindenskov, Maria Mercedes M.. 2023. „Wo drückt der Schuhe, Habibi?“ Bachelorprojekt, Københavns Universitet.
- SXTN, 2017. Leben am Limit. JINX Music. <https://music.apple.com/us/album/leben-am-limit/1440938325> (Originalværk udgivet 2017)

'Expropiado'

Eduardo Rodríguez Armando

(Formato: Poema nominal/ Técnica: Elipsis verbal)

Entre escombros,
Otrora polifonía.
Aire. Denso silencio.
Destino, fragmentos.
Ruinas.

Camposanto
Polvo, con pulso.
Los que alguna vez.
El tiempo allí.
Fe y futuro.

Yo, explorador
y bajo la costra.
¡Oro!
Tesoro sin memoria,
Ajeno, indiferente.

Raudal sin cauce.
La mano del azar.
¡Indómita providencia!
ya no de uno,
sino del mundo.

De pronto: Vértigo
un "cómo"
pero posible.
Entre la miseria,
Yo.

El oro, escarnio a Chronos
Al polvo y su herrumbre.
Inmune, indemne
Acto y Potencia
Probable

Yo, jamás piríta.
También "Gema"
Latido bajo el escombros.
Jolgorio y alquimia.
Atrás, en algún rincón del

Vinotinto.
Y en la fricción, resistencia.
Pero ni vino, ni tinto.
Inmanencia
Menos que eco. Más que vacío.

Ahora, sapiencia.
Kairos, el Norte.
¡Pacto! (por dignidad)
Eterno fugitivo
Apenas rastro, casi presencia.

Ahora. Rehén
de expectativas
"Libre"
Hebra de Numen.
Arena entre los dedos.

Mi historia, aún.
Cenit y abismo,
Pausa y flujo,
Irreverencia
lo mío.

Escapista (Profesional)
Mercurio y sus estados.
Sigilo de seda,
Fetichismo al destiempo.
No-mundo. Yo.

¡Epojé!
Cicatriz sin gloria.
Apolo y Diosisio
Suficiente, pero ilegítimo
Aprendiz de banderillero

Mi cuarteo,
Ajeno a este suelo; resto de aquel
"por mejor futuro"
y
por un instante: Vencedor.

'Escudando'

(Formato: Verbarium. Técnica: Elipsis Nominal).

Sueño
Camino
voy tosiendo
Recordando
Paro
Respiro
Retrocedo
Observo, escucho
Continúo
Callo
Suenan, gritan
Caigo
llo, sangro ¡Siento!
Sonrío
muriendo
Muriendo
Sonrío
Muero
Despierto

Nota del autor: Este poema inaugura el Verbario (Verbiarium): Una propuesta de formato dentro del género lírico, minimalista y de movimiento perpetuo. El Verbario se rige por la "deuda del verbo": una estructura donde el espacio y la omisión del objeto obliga al lector a "habitar el acto". Permitiendo únicamente el uso de formas verbales, alineación y espacios para capturar el flujo puro de la existencia. El Verbario no describe el mundo; lo ejecuta.

References to Christianity in SKAM and Translational Quirks Across the SKAMverse

by Augusta Eleonora Schultz, student of English

the SKAMverse

SKAM is a Norwegian show, and thus, it is not really fit for the theme of this magazine. But as all people with decade-long hyperfixations will know: With a little will and bend, you can make it fit into any and all conversations. It is not even that hard to make SKAM relevant in an Engerom context. For the unaware reader – which might be quite a substantial amount of you – the Norwegian teenage series and worldwide phenomenon SKAM... is not the only SKAM. In the following years since its conclusion, a Danish theatrical play was granted the rights and produced 3 shows based on 3 of the seasons. More notable and of relevance here, though, is that Julie Andem (SKAM's creator) has been showrunner for the first season of SKAM Austin – the American remake of the series. She and NPR have granted the rights for the production and releases of the following remakes:

- SKAM Austin (America)
- SKAM France
- SKAM Italia
- SKAM NL (Netherlands)
- SKAM España (Spain)
- WTFock (Belgium)
- DRUCK (Germany)
- SRAM (Croatia)

It's already clear how this can tie into the Engerom focus, on account of the languages/cultures in which the show has been adapted (English, German, French, Italian, Spanish), but in general, the themes of language and culture are of grand focus across the board.

Christianity

The theme of Christianity is most prevalent in the third season. In my opinion, the third and fourth season are those that carry the most symbolism and thematic references, and are those that interest me the most in terms of language and message.

Christianity is found explicitly in the form of Isak's mother's constant stream of quotes and bible verses, and in the church scene – but also in many other aspects. For one: Isak's name.

We're most likely meant to connect, through the show's representation of his mother, that Isak was named after Genesis chapter 21, The Birth of Isaac. This verse is referenced in Isak's symbolic rebirth and baptism after Even kisses him underwater; as water in and of itself can create ties to birth. Furthermore, Even's costume in the scene is notable, as he is quite glaringly dressed as God – and he is the one to bring Isak into the water, and the one that pulls him out. It might also be of note to mention Isak's costume: he is Julius Caesar, yes, but he is also wearing a crown of twigs, evoking Jesus imagery. Even resurrects, rebirths Isak, as GOD resurrects Jesus.

The Jesus on a cross t-shirt worn across the series, many have analyzed as a symbol of rebirth. Eskild has already been reborn into his true, gay self, Isak starts his journey in episode 1 wearing the shirt, and Even borrows it when they return from Isak's underwater rebirth.

After the 'Kvart et menneske er en øy' clip, when Isak visits DR. Skrulle, Isak's mom sends a verse from Joshua 1:9. All of her messages have been rooted in care, love, and forgiveness throughout the season, even if Isak doesn't realize it. She's been showing him that there's room for him in her life, even within her religious framework.

It also goes together with the story The Sacrifice of Isaac (Genesis 22:1–20), where Abraham is told by God to kill his only son, Isaac, to prove his faith. He is then stopped by an Archangel who tells him he needn't do it – just like Isak's mother needn't sacrifice her love for her son because she is religious.

The Sacrifice of Isaac is mirrored in Isak's rebirth, as Even, in the same manner, brings Isak up the hill (on a bike). Even brings him underwater, choking him (sacrificing him), but their ritual is interrupted by a little, blonde, white-wearing girl (an angel, perhaps?).

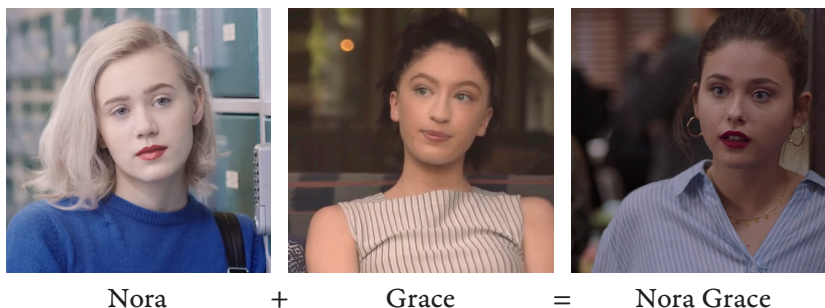

Linguistic references in the SKAMverse

We know from translation studies, and from irritation at subtitling choices, that effect and linguistic references are important when translating and adapting. It's a uniquely satisfying feeling when the target text manages to produce what was intended in the source text. Most traditionally, it's instances of puns, jokes, sarcasm, and – of course – extra cultural references. They can be translated in a number of ways, but when the aim of the original Skam was to realistically depict the culture of Norwegian teenagers, one would expect the same aim for the remakes, leading to an expectation of adaptation: adapting linguistic choices to fit the culture and language in which they take place, while retaining the plot-relevancy, or in some other way, referring back to its place of origin (the source text).

Isak's name is of great importance. But the name is not realistically universal enough for all Isaks across the SKAMverse to retain it – so what did they do?

Most satisfying are the remakes that retained the important Christian ties. This is the case for España, NL, and France who all used the name Lucas (Rubio, van der Heijden, Lallemand respectively) deriving from the biblical evangelist. In DRUCK, the name Matteo (Florenzi) is used, and in Italia, his name is Martino (Rametta), both of which also derive from evangelists. As far as I'm aware, the Belgian Robbe (IJzermans) and the American Shay (Dixon) have no biblical connections – which poses a question about the translators' and writers' knowledge of the symbolism and interconnectedness of the original text.

Other names also refer across the SKAMverse: the American William is called Daniel Williamson (son of William, born of his legacy). In NL and France, the Sana character's name is Iman/Imane, possibly as an homage to Sana's original actress, Iman Meskini. This is also the case for the American Jonas, named Marlon after his actor Marlon Langeland. SKAM Austin's Noora is called Grace, and SKAM España's Noora is called Nora Grace (combining the two).

It must have been a fun linguistic translatory focus must have been for the translators to find national equivalents for the Christian/Christina dichotomy, in order for the Chris-nickname mix-up to still produce the intended effect. This was done in the following ways:

Italia: Fede = Federica/Federico
WTFOCK: Luca/Luka
Austin: Jo = Josephine/Jordan
España: Chris = Christina/Christian
DRUCK: Sam = Samantha/Samuel
France: Alex = Alexxia/Alexander
SRAM: Nix = Nika/Nikola

For some reason, NL decided against the gag, having their names be Janna/Gijs.

Another naming choice made in the original SKAM was the connection between Noora and William's younger sister Amalie. Amalie is Noora's middle name; possibly the motivator for William to repeatedly call her by her full name. A different take on this is found in DRUCK, where Mia (Noora) plays the piano in the same manner that Alexander's (William's) younger sister did. It then culminates in Mia playing his sister's abandoned piano. In DRUCK's first generation (seasons 1–4), Noora and Eva's names are changed to Mia and Hannah, but DRUCK's second generation (seasons 5–8) has references to the original names with Nora (the little sister of their Vilde) as the main character, and Ava as a friend of hers.

Watch the remakes

If you liked the original SKAM, which you probably did, I strongly urge you to give one of the remakes a shot. It would be natural to watch the remake in the culture and language of your studies, as a way to engage with it on a deeper level. However, I would like to give my short (biased, woke) take on the different versions.

SKAM Austin: Very Americanized, and lacks a lot of the charm and personality of the original. Interesting changes to plot and characters however. Quite cringe writing.

SKAM France: A more soap-operatic take on the format. The first two seasons made no changes to the base-material, but the third season is very engaging and ups the stakes. From season 5–12 it's all original material, and gives a take on the life/struggles of Vilde, by making her little sister the main character.

DRUCK: Most similar to SKAM in vibe and effect, includes many improved takes on character-writing and relations. A bit more simple, however, with short seasons and episodes. Their second generation was more successful than that of France's.

SKAM España: The only remake to have all the girls be main characters. They do this by making Chris a female Isak, and by combining Noora and Vilde's parallel storylines in a shared season. Many liberties are taken with the structure.

SKAM NL: Only had two seasons due to their hosting of Eurovision. Super aesthetically pleasing and cinematic version, and has a Noora of color, changing her from a performative activist to an intersectional one. Lacks some drama and immersion maybe.

WTFock: Also a bit of a soap-opera approach, intensifying elements to an unrealistic degree. In between their Isak and Sana season, they added one from the perspective of a white model/influencer dealing with her racial prejudice against a character of color. It was not good.

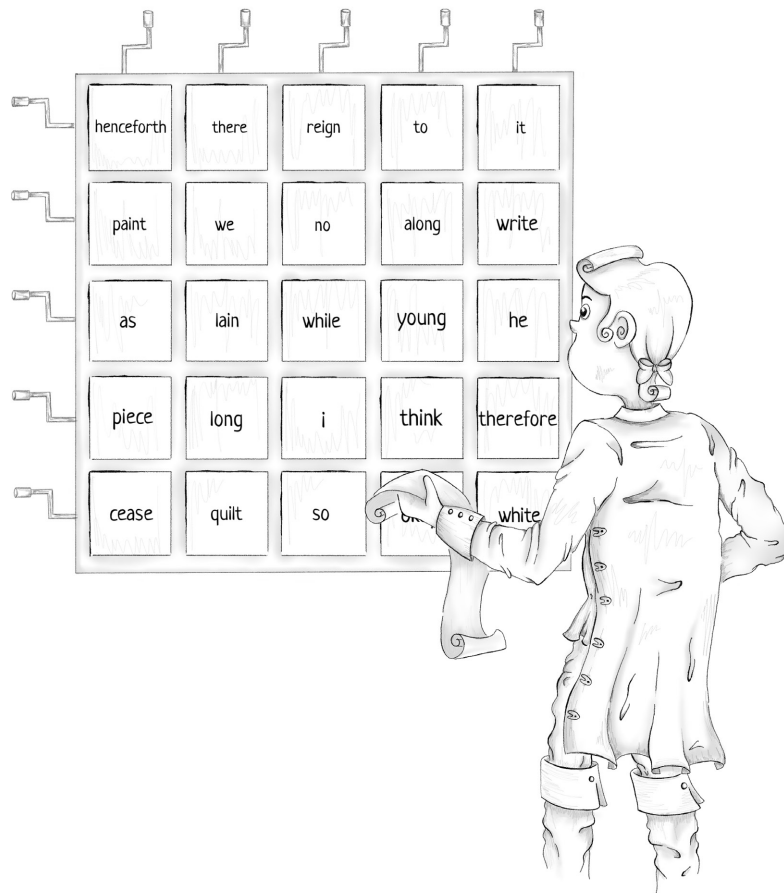

SRAM: Currently ongoing, halfway through their third season as I write this article. Very different culturally, and obviously a much more modern take on the series, being set 10 years later. Instead of a muslim Sana, theirs is Romani.

SKAM Italia: Missed a big part of the point of SKAM, as they were bought by Netflix and released their 4th and 5th seasons in a binge-model, rather than the intended clip-format. Also criticised by Iman Meskini for their terrible handling of their muslim character (who was played by a white, Christian woman). A different take on the Noora/William relationship, and a fifth season focusing on their Mahdi.

References

- Casse, Anna Sofie & Gøse, Sara Nørgaard. "De religiøse symboler i SKAM afkodet" Soundvenue, 6. december, 2016.
<https://soundvenue.com/film/2016/12/de-religioese-symboler-i-skam-afkodet-232832>
- Skamedits. "SKAM season 3 + religious symbols (x)" Tumblr, besøgt 22. juli, 2026. <https://www.tumblr.com/skamedits/154333225628/skam-season-3-religious-symbols-x-the-jesus>

"He said, perhaps I might wonder to see him employed in a project for improving speculative knowledge by practical and mechanical operations. ... By his contrivance, the most ignorant person at a reasonable charge, and with a little bodily labour, may write books in philosophy, poetry, politicks, law, mathematicks and theology, without the least assistance from genius or study.

Illustration af Augusta Eleonora Schultz; citat Gulliver's Travels, 1726

stud.mag.er, i har en sproglig valuta, der kan omsættes til politisk magt i EU

'Mit sprogs grænser er min verdens grænser,' skrev filosofen Ludwig Wittgenstein. Det gælder også i europæisk politik.

For i EU handler politik ikke kun om direktiver, traktater og komplicerede forhandlinger. Det handler også om mennesker fra 27 forskellige lande, der skal forstå hinanden og finde kompromiser på tværs af sprog, kulturer og politiske traditioner.

Og netop her har I som sprogstuderende en særlig valuta. At kunne fransk, tysk, spansk eller italiensk giver adgang til at forstå andre landes samfund, historier og kulturer og dermed også deres politik.

Det er kompetencer, Danmark har brug for i EU. Der skal flere danskere ned og arbejde i EU's institutioner. Og her behøver man ikke være politolog eller jurist for at have noget at byde på. Tværtimod kan jeres kompetencer inden for sprog, kommunikation, kulturforståelse og analyse være en styrke – også i de politiske stillinger.

Danmarks indflydelse i EU afhænger også af, at vi forstår dem, vi samarbejder og forhandler med. Danmark er uløseligt forbundet med resten af Europa, og derfor har vi brug for danskere i EU, der bringer forskellige fagligheder i spil.

Så kære stud.mag.er: I har en sproglig valuta, der kan omsættes til politisk indflydelse i EU.

Og for nogle af jer kunne det måske også blive vejen til Bruxelles. Men hvilke muligheder har man egentlig som sprogstuderende i EU's institutioner? Det kan I blive klogere på den 8. oktober kl 17.30, hvor Europæisk Ungdom København inviterer til et arrangement om netop mulighederne for at arbejde i EU som sprogstuderende. Læs mere via QR-koden.

Vi vil i hvert fald gerne lobbye jeres sag: Der skal flere danskere i EU, og vi har brug for dem, der forstår Europa.

Følg med på @eurocph.

– Bestyrelsen i Europæisk Ungdom København

Kilder til bladet

'sammenhold' definition: Den Danske Ordbog

Skou anbefaler: Ben Dodsons 'iTunes Artwork Finder'

Schultz anbefaler: <https://dk.pinterest.com/pin/15270086238460698/>, <https://dk.pinterest.com/pin/15199717486804409/>, <https://dk.pinterest.com/pin/3096293488018408/>, <https://dk.pinterest.com/pin/31103053674519245/>

Bratkova anbefaler: <https://www.cornellsun.com/article/2026/05/erm-actually-a-nerds-guide-to-christopher-nolans-the-odyssey>, https://www.saxo.com/dk/arkitekten-en-kvinde-bog_9788793817296

Norlin anbefaler: Dodsons 'iTunes Artwork Finder'

SKAM NL: redigeret https://assets-start.npo.nl/resources/2023/06/30/9804c86e-5591-4455-a619-4d472f933c5b.jpg?dimensions=1200x627&resize_fit_method=cover with <https://skam.fandom.com/wiki/File:Skamnl.svg>, both originally NPO

Isak & Even i kostume på cykel: DR.dk, oprindeligt NRK

Isak & Even i seng: DR.dk, oprindeligt NRK

Nora: <https://woman.dk/kultur/det-vidste-du-ikke-om-noora-fra-skam>, oprindeligt NRK

Grace: Facebook Watch: <https://www.facebook.com/watch/?v=1107505066126565>,

Nora Grace: https://skam-espana.fandom.com/wiki/Season_3_Episode_6, oprindeligt Movistar

Chris: <https://periskop.no/fettskrekk-utraderer-tjukke-barn/#pid=1>, oprindeligt NRK

Pen-Chris: DR.dk, oprindeligt NRK

SKAM España: https://skam-espana.fandom.com/wiki/Season_2, oprindeligt Movistar

Tak til alle bidragsydere

Asger Falkesgaard-Ohlsen (tysk)
Augusta Eleonora Schultz (engelsk)
Blendi Abduramani (engelsk)
Eduardo Rodríguez Armando (spansk)
Daniel HH (engelsk)
Jacob Heron Kobbervøl (engelsk)
Lars Troels Møller (spansk)
Maria Mercedes M. Lindenskov (tysk)
Mathias M. F. Jakobsen (engelsk)
Peter Beckwith-Christiansen (engelsk)
Sabrina Skou (engelsk)
Sarah Lynggaard (engelsk)
Sean Källberg (engelsk)
Simon Norlin (engelsk)
Tone Weltzin Kristensen (fransk)
Trine Kestner (spansk)
& de fire engelskstuderende og den ene spanskstuderende.

Denne udgave blev produceret af følgende stud.mag

eng	Mille Thorbøll (adm., PR, pengedame, redaktør)
fr	Jasmin Abdul-Hamid (adm., PR, redaktør)
eng	Sabrina Skou (adm., ansvarshavende redaktør)
eng	Helene Hecquet (adm., PR, ansvarshavende redaktør)
eng	Sean Källberg (adm., sats, redaktør, korrektur)
eng	Simon Norlin (adm., redaktør)
eng	Mathias Frost (adm., pengemand, redaktør)
eng	Anna Foss-Soper (adm., korrektur)
eng	Augusta Eleonora Schultz (adm., PR)
eng	Sarah Lynggaard (adm., redaktør)
ita	Ana Bratkova (PR, redaktør)
eng	Nina Hald Phillipsen (korrektur)
ty	Betram Bolving (redaktør)
eng	Lou Deschamps (redaktør)
spa	Pernille Werdelin (redaktør)
spa	Eduardo Rodríguez Armando (redaktør)

Tak til Københavns Universitets Almene Fond og Studiemilløpuljen for finansiering af print, forplejning og reception.

Tak til diverse undervisere på Engerom for deres interesse og hjælp med at sprede budskabet.

en note fra opsætteren

stud.mag produceres af Engeromstuderende med stor taknemmelighed til alle bidragsydere. Bladet begyndte som en idé genereret (menneskeligt) fra følelsen af, at vi manglede et tidsskrift. Nogle havde tænkt, at Engeromstuderende skulle have et sted at udgives selv. Andre var forvirret over, at da de først havnede på uddannelsen ikke kunne finde det tidsskrift studiet jo måtte have. Da de hørte om stud.mag hoppede de glædeligt ombord. Det er nu anden udgave som pryder dine øjne. Og #3 er allerede på vej.

I denne udgave har vi lært og forbedret os fra vores debut. Som satsmand er det bladet selv der hovedsageligt vedkommer mig. Bladet er stadig hæftet, men nu med en (slags) ryg. Denne gang er papiret også ubestrøget, altså lidt grovere, så man kan skrive (lave krydsord) på det. Typografisk set har typografen nu læst en bog om typografi (Bringinghurst) og har, hvis man selv må sige, opgraderet graferingen. Hvis alt går som det gerne må, kan du endda læse denne, og første, udgave online på studmag.dk. (Opdatering: Det gjorde det ikke.)

Hvis du kunne tænke dig at være med i stud.mag kan du med fordel lukke bladet og kigge på bagsiden. Derefter kan du vende det om og åbne det igen! Spøg til side – bladet består af bidrag, og selvom vi gerne selv skriver siderne fulde, vil vi meget hellere læse dit skriv. Du kan derfor, på bagsidens portaler, følge med i hvornår vi 'call for papers'.

Hvis du vil være med i stud.mag som redaktør, korrekturlæser, PR-person eller heppekor kan du ligeledes kontakte os på mail eller sociale medier, hvor der også reklameres for opstartsmøde. Vi ønsker meget gerne nogle fra GeRom!

Med det siger jeg tak for læsningen. Kritik og eventuel ros til hvad som helst (ift. bladet, ikke dine surdejsboller) kan sendes på de førnævnte kanaler. I en tid hvor humaniora ikke værdsættes retteligt af omverdenen må vi gøre det selv. Ha' et godt efterårssemester, vi ses til foråret.

– Sean Källberg, 2. august 2026

stud.mag stiftet af Mille Thorbøll, Jasmin Abdul-Hamid, Sarah Kirpekar-Sauer, Johanna Okkels og Sean Källberg.

vil du også være med?

Tredje udgave af stud.mag kommer næste semester igen, forår 2027. Inden da har vi brug for endnu flere bidrag! Hvis du læser på Engerom og gerne vil indsende din egen essay, eksamensopgave, digte, kortprosa, anmeldelser eller andet ukategoriseret skriv der er sproglig relevant, så skyd os en mail.

Send dit bidrag til stud.mag.engerom@gmail.com
Afleveringsfrister bliver meddelt på vores sociale medier.

stud.mag – Engeroms Tidsskrift

studieblad.engerom